HOUSEHOLD AFFAIRS
By Mary Lee.

By Nancy Lee.
The United States department of agriculture is not sufficiently rewarded for the interest it takes in the home. Either the housewife does not know about the bulletin which are constantly issued or does not realize their value.

The most experienced and best equipped people in their various lines are the authors of these little publications, and they are always sent freely upon application.
Some of the titles of the bulletins may serve as an illustration of their usefulness:
Economic use of meat in the home.
Meats: Composition and cooking.
Marked classes and grades of meat.
The use of meat as a food.
The use of milk as food.
Digestibility of pasteurized and cooked milk.
Potatoes and other root crops as foods.
Sugar and its value as food.
Nuts and their value as food.
The value of fruits and vegetables.
Canning fruits and vegetables.
Preserving and jelly making.
Combining files.
A device for ridding houses of flies.
There is also a list of free and available publications of special interest to farm women, including agricultural education and nature study, agricultural clubs, bee culture, flower raising, every possible subject which would appeal to a woman on a farm. It is not in the least dull or statistical reading, these bulletins, but practical, interesting and stimulates the value of "reading up" in her profession, just as the doctor, lawyer, or scientist does in his.

If she is to do the best work for her family she must have her data well in hand and keep abreast of the times.
This work of home making and keeping is no longer a hit-or-miss endeavor. It is a well ordered and conducted profession, and the housewife herself must make the choice as to whether she is to be enrolled among the careless, haphazard workers or the efficient professionals of her class.

the temple, and another in the abdomen.
Captain of Detectives Bates with Detective La Salle went to the place at 7:30 o'clock, had the body of the man sent to the undertaking parlors of Dunning & McEntee, then continued their search for the second man. The dead burglar had complete set of burglar tools, all the valuables taken from the Hatcher home, but nothing to indicate his identity. The valuables taken consisted of two diamond pins, Hatcher's watch and a small amount of money. A small flashlight was found in his pocket, but no revolver, as it is thought the second burglar had the shooting valuable lodge papers, bank books and receipts were also taken but recovered.

The dead burglar had a specially made vest, in which he had 10 pockets, where he carried his burglar tools. He also had a special police star pinned on his coat.

Robber Young Man.
Hatcher and his wife recently returned from Edmonton, Alberta, where he had been engaged in the brokerage business. They have lived at the present house three days. It is Hatcher's opinion that the burglars knew of the diamonds and jewelry as it was usually worn by himself and wife.

The dead burglar was about 25 years old, 5 feet and 5 inches tall, dark wavy hair, black eyes, slim face, slim build, with badly decayed teeth but at one time having been filled with gold.

Shots Frighten Woman.
"If those two men had gotten away from the house without my husband waking up, I would have died of fright," said a woman who lives at 1000 A. Hatcher street this morning. "I never experienced such a terrible few minutes in my life as when, awakened by the turning on of the electric light in the dining room, I realized that there were burglars in the house. A short time after I felt their warm breath on my face, felt their hands under my pillow and started to get up to catch them."

"The damned things aren't here. Look under the foot of the bed," said one to the other. "I was when they fired the flashlight on at the foot of the bed that my husband woke up, and realizing what was going on, reached under his pillow, and without raising up started to shoot. I put my head under the covers."

Yet between the hour of midnight and the coming of the dawn the denizens of this humble cot disappeared, without sound and without cry.

Chant Greeted Sun.
It had long been the custom of the head of this quiet house to greet the sun with a chant after the manner of his race. "I turned over, pulled the blanket over my head, and in fact a rooster. Blind in one eye 'tis true, but nevertheless otherwise a rooster."

His cooort was the pet hen of a suburban family and her chicks future hopes for chicken a la Maryland. There was a walling and gnashing of teeth in the suburban household on the morning when the feathery creatures were found missing.

Maddened by the thought of losing his "two fried eggs" every morning and spurred by the cries from the children for the pet hen the head of the household went forth with lust of battle in his optics and the spring of his legs. He ran the whole gamut of provision houses on his way to town and at last in North Portland struck a clue. A tiny pin feather on the floor of the North Portland provision house was the clue aforementioned. It came from Nelly the trained hen. Dashing into a back room the owner called his pet by name, "Pedro, Nelly, Pedro answered in muffled tones from the innermost recesses of a burlap bag, while Nelly's clear meeko-contraito notes came forth from the innermost recesses of the same sack.

Set-To Resulted.
There was some little set-to between the indignant suburban and the storekeeper, in which the suburban and persiflage played an important part, but Nelly and Pedro were taken back to their happy home just the same. Now all that is about the little drama is but a mere curtain raiser to the main show.

Pedro and Nelly are but flosam and jetsam in the suburban misadventures as compared with the organized wholesale robbery of hen roosts that has been carried on in Multnomah county, especially along the line of the Hood River, for the past two years. Whole roosts have been robbed with as many as 300 fries taken in a single swoop. With never a noise, with never a telltale trace a band of thieves has systematically and cleverly robbed the chicken roosts of the suburban communities and put a score or more of small chicken raisers out of business.

Speaking in police parlance, some North Portland provision men have been acting as "fences" and buying and disposing of the feathered trophies.

Evidence Being Collected.
Indignant people who have been robbed are now endeavoring to collect evidence and bring the miscreants to justice. If they do perhaps the industry of raising chickens for the market will be revived but if they don't, there isn't a chance in the world.

New Year's Eve 2000 chickens, all fries and prime for the market, were taken from a place near Multnomah; Friday three roosts were stripped in Maplewood. These nocturnal visits are made on the same people about twice a year, just before the young pullets are ready for market. One man near Capitol Hill restocked his place three times following depredations. Today he lives in a two-room apartment and says store eggs are the best ever.

One poor old lady who had 200 chickens, from which she made her livelihood, went out to the roost one morning and found it bare, like Mother Hubbard. She has been in bed ever since.

Gets Divorce, but Loses Wine.
Oakland, Cal., Jan. 7.—Mrs. Clara Monigetti brought suit for divorce here. "All I want from my husband," she said, "is 100 gallons of wine and a promissory note for $500." She got the divorce and the note but not the wine.

Denizens of Humble Cot Stolen Search Rewards Head of House

Family of Chickens Taken by Thieves Incident in Series of Robberies That Have Cost Multnomah Raisers Hundreds of Fowl in Past Two Years.

There was a tragedy out on the Hood River line the other night, the revolting details of which are today for the first time published in the public prints.

A peaceable, home-loving family, consisting of a father, who, being blind in one eye, was more or less dependent on charity, a mother who was a social favorite in the community and a brood of little ones that were growing up sturdy and strong in the country air, were the principals.

As was its custom the family retired early to bed. The night was dark. There was no sound, but the scarcely audible hum of life in the suburban community, and the occasional whinny of a horse in the distance. All was pastoral, truly rural and bucolic.

Yet between the hour of midnight and the coming of the dawn the denizens of this humble cot disappeared, without sound and without cry.

It had long been the custom of the head of this quiet house to greet the sun with a chant after the manner of his race. "I turned over, pulled the blanket over my head, and in fact a rooster. Blind in one eye 'tis true, but nevertheless otherwise a rooster."

HOOD RIVER IN LINE WITH NEW 'CLEANUP'

Playing Cards for Prizes at Social Events May Be Stopped.

(Special to The Journal.)
Hood River, Or., Jan. 7.—Gambling and gaming of all sorts and descriptions were placed under the ban at the council meeting Monday night when Chief of Police Carson was given orders to enforce the city ordinances relative such conditions. Chief Carson then made the rounds of the cigar stores and drug stores, and warned the proprietors that playing cards for credits of any kind, and shaking dice for cigars, etc., must be stopped. Several of the stores took the card tables out of the back rooms and stored them in the attic.

It is reported that the edict of the council will extend to the "pink teas" and like socials where cards and other games of chance are played for prizes. I expect to enforce the law to the letter irrespective of whom it may affect," said Chief Carson. "All of the places of business where games have been carried on have been notified, and as far as I am able to determine they all know that they must keep the tables clear of all games of chance."

Man Hurt in Smash-Up.
Two automobiles badly damaged and one man bruised was the result of a smashup between two cars, one a touring car and the other a milk delivery wagon, at East Forty-ninth and Belmont street Monday afternoon. The driver of the milk delivery car, F. E.

Jackson, is at home at 282 Belmont street, badly bruised and shaken up. The collision was caused by Jackson's car skidding half way across the street when he attempted to turn off Belmont street at Forty-ninth. The other car, a demonstrator, belonging to the John Deere Plow company, was going out Belmont street on the right hand side of the street and the speed of Jackson's car, when he attempted to turn, carried it half way across the street and into the left hand side of the touring car. The cars were both badly damaged.

Shoes and hosiery should be selected with care as to both comfort and appearance. Fashion permits much liberty, but the woman of good taste will be conservative. Every eccentricity exaggerates defects and minimizes shapeliness and trigness.
Stockings should be half a size larger to accommodate the foot as it spreads with the weight upon it, and for the same reason the shoe should be of pliable material. Black in both hosiery and shoes gives the best effect, but, since colors are in vogue, it is wise to compromise on plain color and plain weaves.
For those whose feet are irritated by silk there are cotton-footed silk stockings. White-footed hose are preferable to either. All cheaper grades of hosiery should be washed in soda and water before being worn.
Shoes properly fitted will hold the feet in a firm grasp with the pressure uniformly distributed. The sole will be just broad enough to serve as a foundation. The heel will be of moderate height and placed beneath the end, not the middle, of the foot. It is equally a mistake to wear shoes too large, for the shifting about of the foot will cause callouses and blisters. Shoes, like other apparel, should fit so perfectly that the wearer is not reminded of their presence.

Alma Francis claims to have originated the thong slipper, from which undoubtedly came the "dango" progeny. It is a triumph in artistic effect and comfort.

States District attorney explained to Judge Welborn when the case finally was called late yesterday.

The court instructed that the case be tried at once.

Surveyors Near Penitentiary.
Penitentiary, Or., Jan. 7.—The O. W. & N. company has a crew of surveyors at work just east of here, running a line in contemplation, it is believed, of changing its road bed so that the difficult grade east of the city and a number of dangerous crossings will be eliminated.

Congressman Makes Demand.
Washington, Jan. 7.—Congressman Keating demanded today that the agriculture department investigate a charge that Superintendent Harry R. Ruff of the federal forest reserves at Steamboat Springs, Colo., was among the men who deported a number of striking miners from there last week.
