

PORTLAND, OREGON, SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 15, 1914.

VILLA DESCRIBED AS GOOD MULE KICKER BY JOHN S. REED

Former Portland Boy Writes
Graphic Account of Mexican Rebel Leader.

John S. Reed.

"A stout heavy Mexican, with a mustache, dressed in a soiled brown suit, his shirt collar open at the throat, was kicking mules."

In these words John S. Reed, a former Portland boy, and a son of Mrs. C. J. Reed, opens a most graphic pen picture of Francisco Villa, the Mexican revolutionist, which was published in the New York World early this month.

Reed, still a young man in his twenties, is now on the border, with El Paso as his headquarters, collecting material for a series of articles for the Metropolitan magazine. After his graduation from the Portland academy in this city he matriculated at Harvard, was graduated in 1910 and soon after joined the staff of the American Magazine. To use the strict literary parlance he has "arrived" most rapidly and his description of Pancho Villa, the man, whom he has dubbed the Mexican Robin Hood, is an admirable specimen of his prowess—more especially so, since it shows a side of the man little known by the American public.

Watches the Big Man.

"A stout heavy Mexican, with a mustache, dressed in a soiled brown suit, his shirt collar open at the throat, was kicking mules." "I watched the big man as he drove the mules into the stock car. A big hat sat on the extreme rear of his head. His mouth hung open generously, and from it issued a perfect stream of mule driver's maledictions. He was covered with dirt. The sweat poured down his face. He would head a mule up the gangplank—and the mule would invariably balk.

"Chingado! Vamos, hijo de la!" the big man would bellow, kicking the mule violently in the stomach. The animal would snort and gallop up the runway. Finally all the mules were loaded in the car and the train. "Amigo," yelled he to a passing soldier. "Give me a drink." The man produced a canteen, which the other upended.

"Hey," cried the soldier. "You needn't drink it all." The big man finished the last drop and handed it back, grinning. "Go over to the river and say you have my permission to fill up again."

"His forehead and turned-up nose were so boyish and his grin so good-natured that I spoke to him.

"They're sending a good many troops," I said. "It looks as if Villa is going to attack Torreón right away."

"He turned around and I was looking into a pair of hard, staring, round, brown eyes set in a face slightly bloodshot from much exposure to wind and sun.

"What do you think about it?" he said.

"Well," I answered, "I think that there won't be much fighting after you fellows take Torreón."

"Soldier," he ejaculated, suddenly serious. "Let's hope so!" He looked around at the preparations for a minute without speaking. "Oyga, amigo!" he shouted a soldier who stood sentinel with his rifle at the end of the train.

"Say, friend, go and tell General Natera to come here for a minute." The man shouldered his gun and slouched out of sight. I said to myself: "This is either a joke or that fellow's got his nerve. Imagine an American private soldier sending for a general in that way!"

"In a few minutes the young, slender figure of General Natera, in a khaki uniform, swung around the corner of the stock car. He marched up to the big, dirty man, saluted, and said: "What did you wish, my General Villa?"

Washington Saloons to Go.

Washington, March 14.—The actual work of weeding out a number of the capital's saloons, under the Jones-Worke excise law, will begin Monday. The city's excise board had before it a mass of data showing what places will fall under the ban of the new law. This requires that saloons shall not be located near schools or churches. Up to a certain limit, the saloons are automatically abolished. Additional pruning, under a reduction clause of the law, will further reduce the establishments.
