$16,212 AMOUNT ASKED

Chemists Contend Portland Concern Reorganized and That Discontinuance of Royalties Followed.

Charged with using a secret process of refining coconut oil and manufacturing by-products without paying for the right, the Kaola company, a North Portland plant, is made the defendant in a suit started in the United States district court today by attorneys for six Frenchmen of Marseilles, France.

The complainants are Emilian Rocca, Felix Tassy, Francis de Roux, Barthelmy de Roux, Jean Baptiste Rocca and Joseph Tassy, copartners under the firm name of Rocca, Tassy & De Roux.

The complaint, which is an unusual one in terms and financial expressions, asks that the Kaola company and its immediate predecessor, the Coconut Products company, pay in back and future royalties, $4,000 francs or $14,212.

The complaint states that the plaintiffs contracted November 26, 1909, with the Oriental American company to divulge, for 10 years, the secret process for refining coconut oil and its products.

When the contract was executed, the complaint states, the Oriental-American company paid $6,000 francs and was given the process, together with plans and specifications necessary for machinery installation.

The local police were notified this morning to be on the watch for two youthful persons from Seattle, who were said to be coming to Portland to be married. It is requested that they be held until their parents arrive.

Howard Robinson, 16 years old, and Miss Gertrude Powell, 17 years old, were reported leaving Seattle at midnight, but they did not arrive here on the morning train.

Brother Wires to Sister That He Was Shot and Asked for Money—Telegram Started Investigation.

In order to get money yesterday afternoon, Jacob Vohl, employed as janitor in an apartment building, wired his sister in Seattle that he was shot.

This little telegram caused as much excitement in the Portland and Seattle detective bureaus as a real murder.

Vohl was arrested at midnight, admitting the false telegram, and this morning begged Municipal Judge Stevenson to be released.

The sister immediately asked the Seattle detectives to learn more of the accident, whereupon the Portland detectives were called upon for information.

Four detectives spent six hours yesterday trying to locate Vohl, their work ending in his arrest.
