WHAT LABORIS DOING "May" Is Not Name of All the Waitresses in This Great City.

Bank Button Signifies Good Standing. If a waitress approaches you in any of the restaurants and dining rooms of Portland with a little green button pinned to her waist with the word "May" across its face, that does not mean that her name is May, but that she is a member in good standing for this month in the Waiter and Waitresses union. This organization has a club room at 247 1/2 Stark street, where it maintains an employment bureau for its members, a reading room and telephone service. Waiters travel a good deal, and here can be found young men who within the last few months have been in a dozen different states. Waiting on table is a profession to some extent, and it takes experience and adaptability to make good at it. The local union is part of the great American Federation of Labor and has its delegates in the Central Labor Council.

Methodist Worker Aids Oregon "Drys". Harry G. McCain of Topeka, Kan., of the extension branch of the Methodist Episcopal Temperance society, has arrived in Portland and from here will direct the campaign for the adoption of temperance measures in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, at the November elections. C. Reed of Portland will have charge of the Portland headquarters. The campaign will include the general distribution of temperance literature and the securing of outside speakers. Headquarters have been opened in the Couch building. Mr. McCain formerly was a student at Willamette university at Salem.

Financing Educational Campaign. William Moore, a member of the Carpenters Union, has been selling eight hour buttons the past few days. The larger part of the proceeds go toward financing the educational campaign for the two eight hour measures that will be on the ballot for November. He has disposed of several thousands of the buttons at 10 cents each. Mrs. Jean Bennett has also been selling them with considerable success.

Local printers are talking of organizing three or more baseball teams, and will include in them representatives of allied trades.
