

PORTLAND, OREGON, SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 7, 1914.

TOOTH ANNIVERSARY OF NEW HARMONY BEING CELEBRATED;

Centennial of Establishment of Unique Community Appropriately Observed.

WORK OF ROBT. OWEN

Former Leader of Socialist Settlement Lived Ahead of His Time.

New Harmony, Ind., June 6.—United States senators, governors and other men of national prominence gathered to gather in this little town on the Wa-bash during the week beginning to-morrow to take part in a celebration of the centennial anniversary of the founding of New Harmony, which was the first notable attempt in America to establish a community based on the theories of Socialism and cooperation. The attempt was a failure, though some of the principles of the founders have been carried out by the members of the community down to the present day.

The community was founded originally by the Harmonists, a sect which originated in Wurtemberg about 1789. The founders were George and Frederick Rapp. The members of the sect held their property in common and considered marriage a civil contract. In 1807 the Rapps and a number of their followers emigrated to America, and settled first in Butler county, Pennsylvania. In 1814 they moved to this section where they purchased 27,000 acres of land and founded a community, which they called Harmony. Ten years later they sold their land to Robert Owen, and, returning to Pennsylvania, settled at Economy, a few miles north of Pittsburgh.

Owen Lived Too Soon.
The New Harmony movement, which attracted world-wide attention, dates from the time that Robert Owen acquired control of the community and sought to put into practice his theories of Socialism. Owen, a native of North Wales, was one of those unfortunate men who lived in advance of his time. His entire life was devoted to various plans for the benefit of his fellow men, and yet he is remembered as having been a failure.

He is known as the founder of English Socialism. His views were the result of his own practical and successful employment of the cotton manufactory, during which he came to realize the desirability of better relations between capital and labor. Owen was but 19 years old when he became manager of a cotton mill employing 500 operatives. Under his direction the mill became noted for the excellence of its work. The first American cotton ever sent to England was made by him. Mr. Owen married and settled in New Lanark, Scotland. Here he became the possessor of one of the largest cotton mills in the world, and began to work out his theories in regard to labor. He viewed with dismay the social conditions among his people and began to improve them. He built better homes for them, induced them to become cleanly and to spend their money to advantage. He established a store where they could buy the best goods at the lowest possible price, and he strongly urged a self-respecting spirit among them.

New Lanark became one of the notable places for statesmen and reformers to visit, and among the notable persons who went to see Owen's work was the future Emperor Nicholas of Russia. When Owen began to propose plans for the establishment of cooperative colonies, the Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria, was one of those who became deeply interested in his projects.

Colony Is Failure.
To carry his plans into effect Owen himself came over to America. In 1824 he purchased the town of New Harmony from the Rapps and here he established the first non-religious community in the New World. On January 12, 1826, a constitution known as "The New Harmony Community of Equality" was adopted. On July 4 of the same year Owen delivered his famous Declaration of Sentiments, in which he denounced the "Private Property, Irrational Religion, and Marriage."

But the men and women attracted to New Harmony were enthusiasts like Owen himself, persons with entirely impractical ideas and advantages of every sort. After several years of hard work Mr. Owen abandoned all hope of success here. He returned to London and spent the remainder of his life in writing and working for socialism and cooperation. He brought about shorter hours for factory workers and served to uplift the working classes by his constant and generous labors.

Funerals Do Not Have Right-of-Way

Judge at National Capital Says There
Is no Law Prohibiting Driving
Through Cortage on Streets.
Washington, June 6.—After years of observation, all Washington was shocked by a police court ruling that a "law" preventing vehicles from driving through funeral cortages is no law at all. The judge, in a case charging violation of the "law," pored through dusty tomes and found that almost everybody had been obeying an injunction not prohibited. Streetcars, automobiles and wagons, uniformly have refrained from bolting through funeral processions. Superstition and custom, however, are enforcing the "unwritten" law making funerals immune from interruption.
