

ELKS PREPARING FOR THE ANNUAL RODEO AT KLAMATH FALLS

Well-Known Buckaroos and Wild Horses Rounded Up for Occasion.

NOT TO MAKE MONEY

Bucking Events Not Only "Thrillers" Provided for Crowds' Entertainment.

(Special to The Journal.)

Klamath Falls, Or., June 27.—With the third annual rodeo of the Klamath Falls Elks only a few days off, tourists wishing to see the big carnival of western sports, cowboys who will compete, strings of speedy range horses for track and relay races, "outlaw" horses from distant ranches, Klamath, Modoc and Plute Indians from the reservation, and clouds of "Texas" longhorns, are beginning to put in an appearance.

Already the demand for rooms is heavy. In addition to the hundreds of rooms in Klamath Falls hotels at the disposal of the guests, the Elks have listed every spare room in the city in order to accommodate the throngs headed this way.

The rodeo dates are July 2, 4, 6. Out at the rodeo grounds, Art Acord, Earl Simpson and their staff of expert horsemen are having strenuous times of it, as the strings of wild horses from all parts of the country are brought in. The Elks have offered a cash prize for the worst out-law developed at the rodeo, and this is bringing unruly steeds from ranches near and far.

The Elks have a number of hard bucking horses of their own, and Acord's cowboys have secured many others this spring, but the Elks are always on the lookout for others. A broncho is an awfully deceptive animal, and the most detected appearing bunch grass product of the lot may be the one that has all of the old tricks of the range and a few new ones, ready to spring on the unsuspecting vaquero. Therefore, every horse is being tried out, and the best (which in this case means worst) will be saved for the bucking contest.

There is another reason for trying these horses out too. This is to kill out all those that have no tendency to buck, and to also eliminate the horses that show viciousness, are unable to keep their feet, or have developed bad means of bucking. The most dangerous trait, the "fallback," the horse that falls back once and rises itself of a rider will do this nearly every time, killing his rider with his weight and the middle horn.

It is largely on account of the danger of this trait that "Cheyenne," "Square Deal," "Baldy Green" and other star buckers are caught by the pickup men after they have bucked for about a minute. In that 60 seconds, these bronchos, hand and foot, are given a great assortment of pitches, twists, side winds and dives, which in most cases, send the rider sprawling. In case the rider sticks though, this type of outlaw does not meekly submit to being ridden, but will try still another stunt, and the "fallback" is a last resort.

The bucking contest is one of the biggest events of the rodeo, but there are many other events on the program that are just as hard contested, and which are just as thrilling. In addition to the contests, there will be a number of exhibition stunts every afternoon, to fill in any delay that may occur in the program by reason of accidents, etc. Acord and Simpson, who are a show by themselves on the backs of trained horses, will give the "drunken ride" and other stunts; Vera McGinley, in addition to riding bronchos, will give trick work; "Skeeter Bill" Robbins, Buff Jones, Mark Howard and other exponents of rope spinning will contest for honors in the spectacular "four horse catch"; Jim Massey, bareback champion, will also appear, and there will be many other stunts given to hold the crowd breathless.

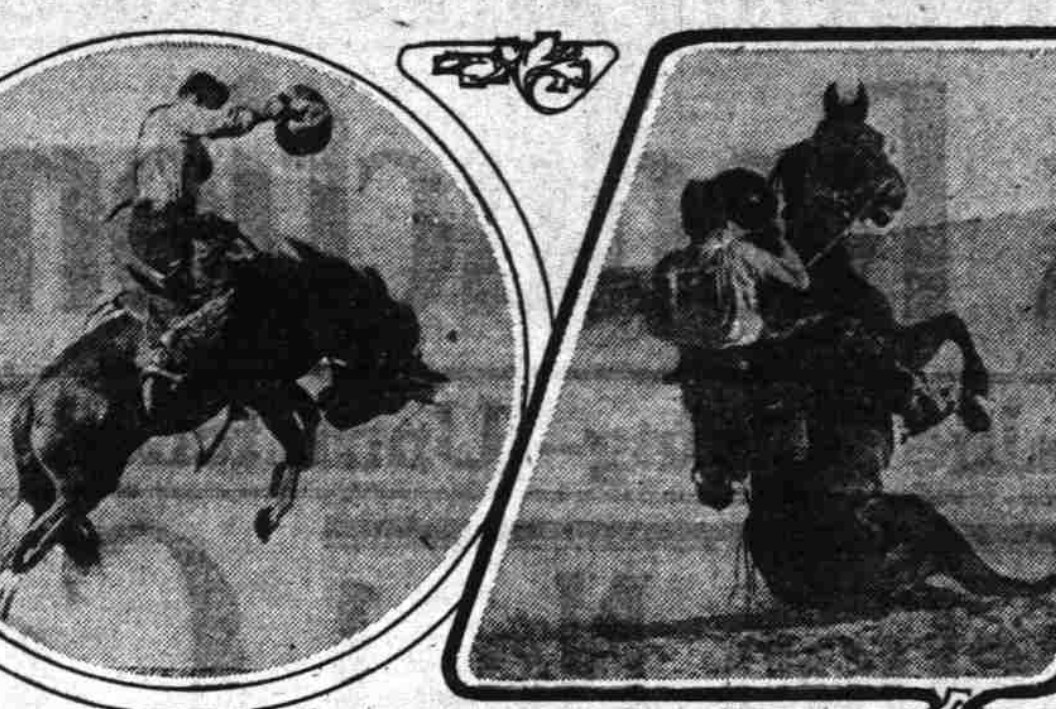

The rodeo is given by the Klamath Falls lodge of Elks for amusement only. The proceeds are all used toward the purchase of bucking horses, etc., and for prizes for the competitors. The public has come to realize that there is no private gain connected with this show and as a result it is growing greater every year, until it is to California, Nevada and southern Oregon what the Pendleton Round-Up is to the inland Empire.

ty preparing material for road beds. It is expected to install a road oiling plant within a few weeks when the main roads of the valley will be treated with a coat of crude oil.

Met After Many Years.

Forest Grove, Or., June 27.—To meet after almost 60 years of separation, after having fought side by side through the Civil war, was the happy experience of J. C. Williams of this city and L. C. Nichols of Hood River, during the state reunion at Tillamook. For several years Mr. Williams lived in Colorado before coming to Oregon, and he did not know where his old comrade was. The two apparent strangers started a conversation at Tillamook and their identities were established. At a meeting of the business men this week it was voted that all would cut weeds from parkings in front of their property and that they would urge others to do the same.

Word has been received here that Charley Howard is quite ill in Portland, suffering from the effects of injuries received in a sawmill. Several days ago his leg was crushed and the doctors thought that they could save the member, but it was found that it was impossible to save Howard's life. Hill and Bowlby Inspect Highway

Work on Siskiyou Mountain Is About One-third Completed; Inspections Are Contractor Will Be Through Soon.

Ashland, Or., June 27.—Sam Hill, good roads booster, accompanied by State Highway Engineer H. L. Bowlby, has just completed inspection of the grading work being done by Contractor J. W. Sweeney on Siskiyou mountain. The work is one-third completed and there is no doubt the contractor will complete the job inside of his contract by September.

Eighty teams and over 300 men are at work. There are five camps, one near the California line, one some three miles this side, one near Siskiyou station, one at Steinman and one near Barron at the end of the grade. There is a total of between 12 and 13 miles of grading, with between four and five miles completed, some of the heaviest cuts being finished.

The completed sections are 4000 feet at Barron, nearly a mile at Steinman, and between two and three miles at the California line. The California contractors are already at work upon the road in Siskiyou county.

The road will be one of the scenic drives of America. The grade does not exceed six per cent. The minimum curve radius is 200 feet. The divide is crossed some three or four miles south of the present road.

At the summit can be seen the upper end of the Rogue River Valley on one side, and the California panorama on the other. The snow-capped summits of Mount Modoc, Mount Shasta, the peaks of the Cascades, Sierra Nevada and the Sierras stretch on either side in endless succession. There are no blind turns on the new highway, but everywhere there is an extended stretch of road in view ahead. In two places where the roadway touches the railroad, right-of-way construction has been stopped by the railroad, pending agreement between the state highway commission, railroad commission and railroad company.

PITT RIVER INDIAN ANSWERS CALL OF HIS FORMER HOME

After Many Varied, Thrilling Experiences Pat Howlock Returns to Klamath.

VISITS HIS OLD FRIEND

Wants to Answer Final Call Where He Lived Early Days.

(Special to The Journal.)

Klamath Falls, Or., June 27.—The fact that for years he was a slave among the Modocs, Klamaths and Snakes, who a few decades ago roamed the vast southern Oregon territory, and that he was saved from being made a sacrificial offering on the neck of time by an army officer, has not dampened the love of Pat Howlock, an old Pitt River Indian, for the Klamath country. After an absence of 40 years, he has returned to the land of the Klamath, and it is here he says he will now live and die. The days preceding the "great treaty" with the three powerful tribes of Indians, signed in 1854, they were wont to make slaves of the Pitt River men, and what others they captured in battle. It was in this way that Howlock, when a boy, was captured. While still a youth, his master died. The Indians then believed in some sort of a sacrifice in such a case. Howlock was selected as the victim. Captain Kelly, then in charge of the troops at Fort Klamath, interfered just in time to save the youth's life. After this, Howlock was taken in charge by Lindsay Applegate, pathfinder and the first Indian agent in the Klamath country. He was raised to manhood by the agent with his own son, Oliver C. Applegate, who afterward became Indian agent, and is today an authority on the southern Oregon Indians.

The treaty of 1854, among other things, stipulated that all slaves held by the Klamaths, Modocs and Snakes be set free and have given equal rights with the other Indians. After this, Howlock went to the home of his tribe in northern California, where he became chief of his tribe and ruled and guided it for years.

Now, however, Howlock wants to live in Klamath. Bent and gray, and accompanied by his wife and son, he recently visited his old time "palace" playmate, Captain O. C. Applegate, and told him of his desire to claim the allotments due himself, wife and son, and to spend the rest of his days in the land of the Klamaths. The matter has been taken up with the Indian bureau, and an order granting the Howlock allotments is expected daily.

Business Deal Is Closed at Dalles

Walther-Williams Hardware Co. Business Is Taken Over by Stadelman and Bonn; Departments Retained.

The Dalles, Or., June 27.—A business transaction of considerable importance was consummated in this city yesterday when Joseph Stadelman and N. A. Bonn purchased the hardware store known as the Walther-Williams Hardware company. The new firm will operate under name of the Stadelman-Bonn Hardware company. The Walther-Williams company retains the implement, machinery, bar iron and heavy hardware departments as well as the garage and automobile business. Mr. Bonn as the new firm has been a stockholder in the Walther-Williams company and Mr. Stadelman is a member of the Stadelman ice company. The transaction is reported to be more than $40,000.

The treaty of 1854, among other things, stipulated that all slaves held by the Klamaths, Modocs and Snakes be set free and have given equal rights with the other Indians. After this, Howlock went to the home of his tribe in northern California, where he became chief of his tribe and ruled and guided it for years.

Miss Clara M. Nixon.

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Or., June 27.—Miss Clara M. Nixon, one of the two young women who completed the regular course in agriculture at the Oregon Agricultural college and received the B. S. degrees, has been appointed assistant in the departments of poultry and chemistry. She will assist in some investigations that have been going on for two or three years on problems connected with incubation of chicks. Miss Nixon was connected with the poultry department of Cornell for some 10 years before coming to O. A. C. to finish her course. At Cornell she specialized in work on feeding young chicks and has since written several bulletins on this subject. The poultry department here hopes to start research work on poultry nutrition with special reference to feeding young chickens, but it may not be possible to get to this subject during the present year.

Motor to Sell Bonds.

Eugene, Or., June 27.—A record trip was made over the summit of the Cascade mountains Thursday of this week by a party of Prineville men in an automobile, making the distance between Prineville and Eugene in 13 hours, starting from the Crook county capital at 8 a. m. and reaching Eugene at 6 p. m., stopping about an hour for lunch. This is remarkable time, considering the roughness of a part of the road over the mountains.

The party, which consisted of J. B. Bell and George H. Brewster, business men of Prineville; R. L. Jordan, county treasurer of Crook, and Frank Elkins, sheriff, came to Eugene to represent the county court in an endeavor to sell $10,000 or $15,000 of the county's road warrants. The First National bank has agreed to take them and furnish the money for the improvement of the highway between the two counties if the proceedings in issuing the warrants are regular and there is no danger of injunction suits against them.

Ashland Fountains Placed.

Ashland, Or., June 27.—In line with the converting of Ashland into a mineral springs resort, for which an initial bond issue of $175,000 has been voted, the city water department has men at work installing 12 bubble fountains at prominent points on the business thoroughfares. They are of ornamental concrete, two feet square, with porcelain bowl and nickel plated outlet, and will cost about $35 each.
