gagement to Joseph W. W. Dal-

The auditorium of the central library appeared last night as though it were the scene of some national convention. Under banners marked with the names of such states as Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, New York, Missouri Iowa, groups gathered. Later, each group spoke for its state in connection with the plan for a general federation of state societies in Oregon for the extending of organized hospitality to next year's exposition visitors who will pass through this city and state. Mrs. Harriet Hendee explained a federation plan she had in mind, including a central headquarters of state societies with registration facilities C. C. Chapman said the Commercial club would cooperate by sending state literature and greetings to every person registering with any of the state societies.

Mrs. B. T. Voorhorst presided at last night's meeting. Eugene Brookings defined the value of cooperation in the federation plan proposed. M. G. Winstock explained how the plan might be financed by small contributions from individual members. Marshall N. Dana suggested a "charting" of the best routes to be used in dis closing the most attractive portions of the city. George M. Hyland discussed the guest-attracting influence that will be exercised by the exposition. Motion pictures showed the "evolution of the Oregon building at the exposition."

FOREIGN FASHIONS FOR AMERICANS

Such a Dress Is a Summer Essential.

By Lillian E. Young. Paris, June 26 .- There isn't a doubt in my mind that our own shops at ome are making quite as splendid a display of new summer wash fabrics as are the ones here in Paris; and if so, you will be familiar with such new tub materials as cotton-velour, washable garbardines, and whipcords, eponge, beachcloth, to go crepe, and a number of others. Wonderfully effective are combinations of one of these rather heavy weaves with any of the sheer voiles or marquisettes, with possibily a touch of hemstitching at the seams or a bit of hand embroidery to lend color and contrast. Interesting as all these newer materials are, our old standbys, the Irish and French linens, hold just the same place at the top of the list that they always have; and now that the color card has expanded considerably they seem to be even more satisfactory than before for good looking and serviceable The dress of the sketch is an example of one of the season's novel designs which can be nicely developed in linen or any of the materials mentioned above. The original is shown in the Avenue d'Opera as a tennis frock, though there seems no specific reason why it should be consigned exlusively to that use. It will make a most attractive afternoon frock, for instance, in turquoise blue, with touches of black embroidery and white ball buttons.

Because the tunic is the real nov. elty in this design we will consider first. I think probably, from the sketch, you will be enabled to see how the front corners are turned back to form a little pocket and finished with a triangular tab, simply embroidered in black and white, The lower edge rounds down a little longer across the back and the gathers about the waist lend ample fulness. The blouse is cut by a long-sleeved kimono pattern, made comfortable and roomy through the width at the armsides and the half-buttoned front closing. A small white vest is set between and there is a broad rolling collar of white as well. The sleeve ends are made to unbutton and turn back, ir accordance with the original sporting purpose of the design, and a girdle of black satin embroidered in white is consistently pretty finish for the

The skirt is quite straight and plain, gathered slightly at the belt and given an inverted fold at the centre front
