

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE LEADER HERE TO JOIN IN FIGHT ON "WETS"

"Pussyfoot" Johnson, Who Was Bootleggers' Terror, Arrives in Portland.

WILL DIRECT PUBLICITY

This Will Be Great Year for the Prohibition Forces, Declares Champion, Discouraging Outlook.

"Pussyfoot" Johnson is on the scene. The man who drove the bootleggers out of Indian Territory is here. The man who as chief special officer of the United States Indian service secured more than 4000 convictions for infractions of the liquor laws is in Portland to direct the publicity of the Anti-Saloon league in the "dry" fight on this year in Oregon, Washington, California and Colorado.

Although known everywhere as "Pussyfoot," William E. Johnson is his name and he hails from Westerville, Ohio, a suburb of Columbus, where he serves as managing editor of the Anti-Saloon league, which is no small matter of a job, as the league publishes 33 periodicals. He is also editor of the New Republic and will have another paper soon when the league establishes its proposed daily at Washington, D. C.

Great Year Predicted. While here Johnson can be found at the league's publicity headquarters in the Stock Exchange building with one of his co-publicity workers, H. P. Hutton, directing the "dry" propaganda for the four western states that are to have state-wide prohibition elections on November 2.

"This is going to be a great year for the 'dry' forces," he said yesterday. "West Virginia has already left the 'wet' ranks. Washington, Oregon, California and Colorado vote on the issue November 3, and indications are that all four states will be carried in favor of prohibition. And on September 22 Virginia decides the question. The outlook is most hopeful there, as over one half of the voters signed the 'dry' petition.

In Washington of 319,000 voters 112,000 names were procured for the original petitions while 57,000 names came in later. I can't say much about the Oregon situation, for I have just reached the state, but in Colorado the 'dry' sentiment is growing rapidly.

Saloons Were Closed. Occupation by the federal troops of the strike zone in that state carried with it the closing of all saloons. Once closed the people were enabled to see the difference between 'dry' and 'wet' and converts were made by the score. Even the editor of a Boulder paper that had been strongly 'wet' was convinced by his brief experience in a 'dry' city.

I can't see where the question of hops has any bearing on the prohibition issue in this state. Statistics show that only about 2 per cent of the hops grown in the state are consumed in Oregon, while the other 98 per cent are exported, most of them going to England. England will not go 'dry' for many a year and Oregon hops will always find a market.

Mr. Johnson is now fighting the cause of prohibition for many years, not only as a worker for the Anti-Saloon league but as a government officer and as a journalist. His only newspaper experience was gained on the Lincoln (Neb.) Daily News, later becoming associate editor of the New York Voice, and then editor of the New Voice, Chicago.

In 1906, as special agent of the department of the interior, it became his duty to enforce the liquor laws in Indian Territory and Oklahoma, later being made chief special agent of the United States Indian service and serving from 1909 to 1911.

4000 Convictions Record. In his term of five years he secured more than 4000 convictions in criminal prosecutions, worked among and fought the most desperate of crooks and bootleggers, had eight of his men killed in performance of their duty and gained the sobriquet of "Pussyfoot."

Mr. Johnson's experiences in tracking and capturing lawbreakers who sold liquor to the Indians were exciting and varied enough to fill a book, and his work as an "outlaw smasher" was highly successful. In addition to his convictions he smashed more than half a million bottles of whiskey and burned out 75 dives as part of his work. The story of Johnson and his deputies is told by Joseph Heighlon in the current number of "The Wide World."

"Pussyfoot" beat the bad men at their own game, but after five years of turmoil and peril he retired to the comparative quiet of editing for the Anti-Saloon league, which publishes three tons of printed matter a day. Now he is out in Oregon and will undoubtedly play an important part in the "dry" fight on the Pacific coast. Mr. Johnson is a member of all the leading international temperance organizations, and is the author of a number of books and brochures on the liquor question. He ran for congress in Maryland once on the Prohibition ticket.

Danger of Forest Fires Now Great

The dry weather of the past month and the past few hot days has dried out the timbered sections to an extent which renders the starting of forest fires extremely perilous. Fires have occurred the past three days but according to reports received at the offices of the Oregon Forest Fire association have all received the attention and small loss of green timber has resulted.

The large amount of road construction going on along the Columbia river is considered an unusual menace, and a number of wardens are engaged in looking after the construction crews. From now on only the greatest of care on the part of all those going into the mountains will prevent serious fires and forest fire protection agencies ask the fullest cooperation on the part of the public in preventing loss of our timber resource.

BLACKBERRIES ARE HUGE

Portland soil not only produces big cherries and raspberries but blackberries as well. G. H. Albright who lives at University Park way, has the berries to prove it. Some of his blackberries are two inches long, one making a complete mouthful. They are of the seedless variety. Mr. Albright is also raising big loganberries although they are not as large as the blackberries. His bushes are only a year old, too.
