Premium lists for the Manufacturers and Land Products show will be issued this week, according to announcement last night of Louis W. Buckley, general manager of the exhibition, which is to be held at the armory and in temporary annexes from Oct. 25 to Nov. 14.

Space in the exhibit halls is being taken rapidly, with the two wings of the exposition—manufactures and land products—about equally popular. During the preliminary campaign so far during the preliminaries to the show will be started out by the Commercial club tomorrow to complete the necessary guarantee fund.

Several hundred applications for the educational exhibit are in the hands of the management, indicating that a large number of individuals expect to participate, as well as the larger manufacturers and land products associations.

GOVERNMENT TO END ITS EVIDENCE IN LAND FRAUD CASE MONDAY

Defense Expected to Put Up Long, Hard Fight in Federal Court.

The government late tomorrow afternoon will finish presentation of its evidence in the trial of E. J. Sellers, charged with misusing the mails in the location of the Oregon California railroad grant. Then will come the long, hard fight that is anticipated the defense will put up.

Theory of Defense Mystery. For the defendant Sellers, his attorney, John E. Ryan of Seattle, as he testified in his opening remarks to the jury, has been persistent in attempting to show that his client's only actual business connection with the other jobbers laid in the purchase of dynamite from an office with Henry J. Harper in Tacoma, and when the latter was out, signed a few receipts for him.

United States Attorney Clarence L. Reames submitted documents showing Minard's affidavits bearing descriptions of the land and deeds tending to show that the company never owned the railroad land section. This section people who paid him to make the applications.

NASHVILLE CITIZENS FURNISH EXAMPLE OF COOPERATIVE EFFORT

New Community Club House Dedicated Free of Debt and Full of Promise.

INSPIRATION FOR OTHERS

Correspondent Asks Whether Other Little Towns in Oregon Will Take Advantage of Cooperation.

Nashville, Or., July 18.—To the Editor of The Journal—Of all the Fourth of July celebrations undertaken in western Oregon, I doubt if any served a chronicler better than the one half way between Corvallis and Newport.

All who shared the shade of big trees on the depot grounds had a grateful thought for the ladies of the Citizens' club, who have cleared up and cleaned up the wilderness which had encroached the spot for 20 years. We are trying to clean up our act in the same way.

Place for Neighborhood Gatherings. The main audience room is 40 by 60 feet. It is a room for library and free talk and social conversation in the rear and on a lower level, kitchen and lunch room, full use of which was made on that first day.

Clubrooms and municipal libraries and dance halls are supposed to be expensive luxuries, but this little community in the foothills of the Coast range three young men were found for leaders, and all responded to whom the new clubhouse was built on a donated plot of ground close to the depot.

Now is that story worth while? Is Nashville to be the only little community in this state which is free of debt, and ratchets can be made to see the possibility of joining hands in cooperation, whether for creamery, cheese factory, fruit cannery or other local industry?

Newberg Cannery Is Local Affair

Published Report That Fuyalup Concern Operates It Is Mistake—Showing So Far Is Entirely Satisfactory.

Newberg, Or., July 18.—Newberg people are somewhat surprised to find printed in a Portland paper and also in a Tacoma paper that the Fuyalup, Wash., cannery association is "operating a cannery at Newberg." This is a mistake, as the local concern is owned by about 500 residents of this locality, almost all of whom are fruit growers.

Now is that story worth while? Is Nashville to be the only little community in this state which is free of debt, and ratchets can be made to see the possibility of joining hands in cooperation, whether for creamery, cheese factory, fruit cannery or other local industry?

Man's Enemy

"WHAT'S THE USE TRYING?"

Murmured Tim Thrift more to himself than to his friend, John, who sat beside him: "For hours I tramped from one business place to another in search of a job and the only man who offered me a job has interviewed me and treated me as if I were a beggar. I looked up at me, listened to my case and more and more hesitatingly said 'No.' 'Till you, Tim,' said John, 'what keeps you from getting a position in your personal appearance.' 'I know it,' admitted Tim, 'but how can I dress up better when I am flat broke?' John thought a while and said, 'You come with me. I'll show the place where you can dress up in the best and most stylish clothes without cash. You can pay for them later on a little every once in a while. Besides, you'll be surprised at how prices they charge for such good clothes. Why, now you run a clear-cut sale and you can get beautiful suits worth up to $14.50. Of course they went to the Eastern Outfitting Co., 405 Washington street. It is now timekeeper for one of the largest houses in town.

BEND'S EMBLEM CLUB WILL SHOW ADMEN FEW STUNTS

The Emblem club of Bend is already preparing hospitality and diversion for the Portland Ad club, says George Palmer Putnam of Bend, who was here last week. The Ad club excursion is to take place September 6 and 7, Sunday and Labor Day, and a special train will be chartered for the trip by the committee in charge, consisting of C. Moore, C. A. Whitmore and R. H. Atkinson. Mr. Putnam attended the Ad club meeting last Wednesday, bringing the official invitation from the Emblem club. Asked what the stunts he had spoken about were to be, he answered: "Nobody outside of Bend and the Portland committee will know anything about it until things begin to happen. Perhaps some of the Ad men will know after it is over what has happened, but we make no promises."
