POACHERS HAVE THE FOREST SERVICE MEN 'BUFFALOED'—EVANS

Game Warden, After Horseback Trip in Umpqua National Reserve Talks.

FEAR FIRING OF FORESTS

Has Word of Praise for Trail-Makers and Their Horses; Believes Wolves Are Increasing.

(Salem Bureau of the Journal.) Salem, Or., July 21.—That game law violators of the Umpqua national forest have the forest service men "buffaloed" was the statement made by Game Warden Evans on his return yesterday from a 200 mile trip on horseback through that region. Evans made the trip for the purpose of ascertaining conditions in the forest and locating, if possible, any one who was engaged in slaying deer in the closed season, although no one was caught. Evans is convinced that some of the forest men could give information which would lead to the apprehension of the guilty parties if they were not afraid that the trespassers' friends, in a spirit of revenge, would set fire to the forests and cause tremendous losses. For this reason, says Evans, the forest service men are attending strictly to their own business and it is up to the game warden and his men to look after them.

Evans said that some venison had been taken out by way of a trail to Klamath Falls, but there was insufficient evidence to warrant an arrest. There are old Indian trails running in all directions through a difficult matter to head off the law violators, he says.

"It is a fact that $1 per pound can be obtained for venison out of season and so the deer slayers are willing to take chances," said Evans. "The supply is plentiful and the deer are not hard to kill. Wolves are said to be too numerous, however, and they must have slaughtered many deer during the winter season. Despite the fact that $30 bounty is paid, the wolves are increasing, I believe, and are a constant source of danger to deer."

Evans described fishing in the forest as almost too tame for sport, explaining that the fish bite greedily at fly hook held two feet above the water. Warden Evans praised the forest service men for their trail building through the forest. Near Hillsie, where there is a sheer cliff, about 400 feet in height, a trail has been cut in the solid rock about 100 feet from the base. It is perfectly safe, although a tenderfoot gets nervous when looking down from the narrow trail. The guides told Evans that the horses never stumble. Cable bridges gave planing means of the bridge swaying backward and forward and causing the horses to spread their feet to prevent falling. The horses have adapted themselves splendidly to conditions and Evans are safe under the most trying conditions and are alive to every requirement.

Warden Evans entered the forest from Roseburg and made a circle, coming out several miles below Roseburg. The deer season opens August 1 and the game warden believes hunters should catch much sport in Douglas county this year.

Salem Votes Not To Increase Force

Many Business Men, However, Believe That City Should Have More Police Protection and May Petition Council.

Salem, Or., July 21.—At the meeting of the city council last night a proposition to add two patrolmen to the police force was voted down 6 to 4. Four members of the council being absent. Opposition to the plan was largely based on the fact that the budget had been made up with a view of having four patrolmen, the number now employed. This is a reduction of two from last year.

Many of the business men have expressed themselves favorably toward the plan to increase the police force and it was said tonight that a strong petition would be signed and presented to the council at its next meeting asking for three officers on duty at night now. One patrol the business district, one is stationed at the Southern Pacific depot and the other man is at the desk in the police station. It is urged that during the late summer and fall season three officers should patrol the downtown business district.
