

JUDGE BURKE FINDS OREGON'S SENATORS ARE VERY BUSY MEN

Senator Chamberlain Sticks to Post Despite His Candidacy for Reelection.

SERVICES APPRECIATED

Portland Collector of Customs Visits Washington and Sees for Himself the Industry of the Senators.

(Washington Bureau of the Journal.) Washington, Sept. 28.—Judge Burke, collector of customs at Portland, under whose administration important economies have already been achieved in the local service, while salaries have been raised and the service improved—paradoxical as this may seem—was frankly surprised at the pressure of business in the offices of the Oregon senators in Washington. "I can well understand," he said to The Journal correspondent, "why Senator Chamberlain has not felt at liberty to leave his post of duty for the purpose of engaging personally in his campaign for reelection. He, as well as Senator Lane, is so busy that it is difficult to find a time when he has leisure to see callers, although I have been treated with the greatest courtesy and consideration by both senators. The long sessions caused by the filibuster over the rivers and harbors bill must have tried them, as well as other senators, very severely; yet they have been constant in their attendance and in the pressing work due to their voluminous correspondence.

Oregon Appreciates Services.

"Oregon is deeply appreciative of the great service Senator Chamberlain has rendered in protecting the appropriations for Oregon rivers and harbors. We in Oregon, and of course the people of Washington also, are deeply interested in the improvement of the Columbia river. We feel that the commerce of the Columbia and its tributaries would grow into the most prominent place on that coast, both as regards imports and exports, if the channel from the straits to the sea were kept navigable for the largest ocean-going vessels. "The 300,000 miles of territory tributary to that port is highly productive and its ability to absorb imports is great and steadily increasing. This is the only port of consequence on the coast that has a water grade into the interior. It is the natural outlet for the great commerce of the Columbia river basin. It is evident, therefore, that the need for the improvement of the Columbia is very great, and the faithful and untiring efforts of Senator Chamberlain to assure the passage of the appropriation is appreciated to the fullest extent by the people of the state of Oregon.

Friends Want to See Him. "It is only the truth to say that we in Oregon have been hoping that this congressional work would be concluded in time to permit Senator Chamberlain to visit his home and that he might make some addresses and see his many friends before the general election. We desire very much to see him reelected by a handsome majority, but there is a general feeling among his friends that his cause is not being injured by his close attention to his duties here, and his unremitting support of the interests of the state.

Too Much Red Tape. Whenever a vessel goes from one bank of the river to the other it enters another customs district, with the attendant formalities and display of red tape not to mention expense and delay. The principal reason why the boundaries of the district are not rearranged to conform to business convenience and common sense is that the present arrangement has the sanctity of procedure and long usage. However, Judge Burke hopes that he will yet succeed in having the change made.

Since he assumed control of the Portland office, Judge Burke has effected a saving of some $5000 a year in the administration of the district, and at the same time has secured an increase amounting to $1000 in the salaries of six employees. As an instance of his methods of administration, he found that a boat and four men were maintained for the purpose of putting customs inspectors aboard ships at Astoria. He found that the cost in the case of each ship visited by an inspector averaged $41. Judge Burke recommended the discontinuance of the system and made a contract whereby the cost was reduced to $3 for each ship.

While in Washington, Judge Burke was the guest of his brother, United States Treasurer Burke. He departed for Oregon last Tuesday night, planning to make one or two stops on his way to the coast.

Oregon's Halibut Banks Valuable

Oregon's halibut banks, which have already rapidly come to public notice in the past two years, are destined to rival those of Alaska, according to M. Wachsmuth, brother of Louis Wachsmuth, of the Oregon Oyster company. The Wachsmuths have just completed a season of successful fishing at Newport in the gasoline launch Sea Dog. "When halibut are so plentiful and easy to take that one can catch 1000 pounds with a hand line, then the grounds must be of unusual importance," said M. Wachsmuth just before leaving for Newport yesterday after a visit in this city. He said that Newport should awaken to the possibilities of halibut fishing and provide more facilities for handling the fish and furnishing gear and supplies to fishermen. The Seattle fleet this summer did all its outfitting on the Sound and all the fish taken were carried back to Seattle for marketing.
