Federal Court for Southern Oregon District Opened; Wolverton on Bench.

ATTY REAMES IS PRESENT

Thomas G. Smith Accused of Killing Link River Beall With Horse shoe.

Medford, Or., Oct. 7.—Federal court for the southern Oregon district opened yesterday afternoon in this city. A jury was empaneled for the case of Thomas G. Smith, an Indian charged with the murder of Link River Beall, a tribesman. Taking of evidence in the case was begun this morning.

It is alleged by the government that Link River Beall was killed by Smith last summer, by being beaten over the head with a horseshoe. The encounter is said to have followed an argument. Beall died a few days later from the effects of the blow. He was over 70 years old and was recognized as one of the shrewdest Indians on the Klamath reservation. His forefathers founded Klamath Falls. He has taken advantage of the schooling afforded the Klamath Indians, and is refined and cultured.

The government is represented by District Attorney Clarence E. Reames and J. J. Beckman, his deputy. District Judge Charles E. Wolverton of Portland is on the bench.

"Unconscious" Man Admits Shamming

G. E. Gayer Says Object to "Foot" Wife and Landlord to Whom Rent Was Due.

G. E. Gayer, 356 East Davis street, the man picked up "unconscious" yesterday morning at 2:30 o'clock at First and Everett streets by the police, admitted this forenoon to Detectives Goitz and Abbott that he was shamming. His object, say the detectives, was to fool his wife and the landlord. Rent is due, but Gayer has no money to pay. He told his wife he had a check from his employer, but this now develops to be untrue.

Patrolmen Collins and Madden found Gayer lying on the sidewalk, apparently unconscious and two bumps on his head. He was taken to the emergency hospital, where the city physician was unable to find anything wrong. Gayer talked incoherently, always saying he could not remember, finally confessing that he was shamming. He has been out of work several weeks. He is an auto driver and machinist.

Culley, W. F. Kell and I. G. Moran captured one of the men, who gave the name of John Smith. He was turned over to Deputy Sheriffs Kennedy and Glennon, who rushed to the place. The deputies searched the brush in the neighborhood, but found no trace of the other robber.

SCENE OF OPERATIONS ON THE RUSSO-GERMAN FRONTIER

RUSSIAN BATTLE LINE REACHES 800 MILES; 3,000,000 ENGAGED

Germans Badly Defeated at Niemen River but Are Invading Russian Poland.

(United Press Leased Wire.) London, Oct. 7.—A battle along a somewhat broken and irregular line extending all the way from Tilsit, in the extreme northeast of East Prussia, to the Carpathian chain south of Cracow, was believed here today to be imminent.

There was already fighting between Wirballen and Lyck, in East Prussia, and skirmishing at various other points along the line. These preliminary engagements were expected shortly to swell in volume and to become gradually merged in one great struggle involving more than 3,000,000 men scattered over a front 800 miles long.

Despite German denials, it was believed here today there was no question concerning the Russian claim that the Niemen river region. From Petrograd came also a report, unverified from other sources, of the capture of near the frontier.

Farther to the southward, the Germans undoubtedly were operating quite extensively in Russian Poland. Strong Russian forces were advancing to meet them.

Concerning developments in Galicia, not much news had been learned today beyond the German claim that the German and Austrian armies engaged in the defense of Cracow had checked the Russians. The latter having far greater resources numerically, however, than the Teutons, it was taken for granted they would speedily bring up reinforcements and resume their attack in any case.

Among military men here the opinion was general that the eastern battle would go far toward deciding the war.

cases, it was said, to break the Teutonic line. The Austro-German forces were declared to have followed this by taking the offensive, and hoped to push the invaders back far enough to raise the siege of Przemysl. The Russians were believed also to be in danger of a flank attack shortly by the German army operating in Russian Poland from the direction of Bendzin.
