

"BELGIUM SALUTES THE FUTURE," SAYS CH. DE BROQUEVILLE

Premier Declares His Country Will Be Bigger and Better Morally in the End.

DISHONOR WAS REFUSED

King and His Ministers Have Already Made Plans for Rehabilitation of Country Despoiled by War.

By William Phillip Sims.

United Press Staff Correspondent. Dunkirk, Oct. 24.—A greater Belgium will be erected on the ruins now strewn throughout our beloved country by the barbarians.

That was the reply made to me tonight by Ch. de Broqueville, premier of Belgium, who is conducting the affairs of his shattered country from this French city.

"I had appealed to him to tell the people of the United States through the United Press what he thought of Belgium's future. He granted me an audience in the city hall here.

It was a singularly impressive interview. Through the open window, the roar of the distant guns on the battlefield where King Albert and his devoted Belgians were still resisting to the very last, could be plainly heard.

Predict a Better Nation.

There was no appearance of despair about the Belgian premier. Although a strip a few miles wide represented all that was left of his native land, and he was conducting its affairs on alien territory, he was more than hopeful.

"Belgium will emerge from her trials cruelly torn and bleeding," he said, "but morally she will be a far bigger and better nation.

While it would be premature to publish our plans for the future, I can assure the people of America that even now, as well as for weeks past the king and myself have been consecrating our spare time to the study of the formulae to employ. I am able to assure you that we are prepared to follow out the plans finally selected with a maximum of rapidity. We are determined on a national reconstruction that will preserve to Belgium all of which she is proud.

She Salutes the Future.

"We are cruelly suffering all of the anguish possible both in public and private. But Belgium salutes the future with the proudest confidence in her own ability.

"Belgium's people in that historic night of Germany's ultimatum, as I had the honor to write Mr. Asquith, foresaw the pain and anguish of the present moment, but Belgium, as one may be thought with the king and his advisers that there can be no hesitation when duty demands.

"We were asked to dishonor, but we refused. There cannot be two honors. Such moral force as our entire people exhibited leads me to hope that we will rise rapidly from the accumulated material ruins strewn throughout our beloved country by the barbarians.

"Belgium will be an energetic in peace as she has been in war. And it will not be the first time that great things have sprung from heroic suffering."

Saloonkeepers to Bear New Beer Tax

Price of Beer Will Be Advanced 50 Cents a Barrel But It Is Unlikely Size of Glasses Will Be Cut.

Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 24.—The price of beer throughout the United States will be advanced 50 cents a barrel, President Gustave Becherer of the Milwaukee Brewers association, predicted tonight, following an announcement of this advance in Milwaukee because of the war tax on beer.

"There is no money in the brewery business," confided Becherer. "The tax hits us pretty hard." Milwaukee saloonkeepers said they guessed they'd have to stand the loss. They were positive, they said, that no Milwaukee citizen would uphold them if they cut the size of glasses of beer.

To lubricate the rims of car wheels that frequently pass over curves, there has been invented a device that feeds a paste lubricant against them automatically.

Lenses Must Be Changed

—Lenses do not wear out, but eyes do.

—Every part of the body changes with advancing years, and our eyes in common with the rest of our physical being show the effect of age.

—We must, therefore, meet the changed conditions of the eyes. The glasses that you bought ten, or even three years ago, are not giving your eyes the proper assistance.

—As our eyes are wearing out year by year, your lenses should be made stronger or weaker to correspond with your failing vision.

—One charge covers entire cost of examination, glasses, frames.

"Fire was also opened in the afternoon on the German batteries near Ostend. England now has a flotilla of vessels very suitable for this work. During the day our vessels were persistently attacked by submarines, but their torpedoes failed to do any damage. Naval planes are helping us."

FRENCH
(Issued Bordeaux at 11 o'clock last night.)

GERMAN.
(Issued by War Office at Berlin.)

"We have crossed the Yser canal in the north in heavy force and the fighting in this vicinity continues with great violence. Our troops continue to make headway slowly east of Ypres and to the southwest of Lille. The British warships have bombarded Ostend without reason.

"We are also advancing in force through the Argonne forest, having taken some machine guns and a number of prisoners. We have been able to bring two French aeroplanes here. "In the territory north of Toul, near Filley, the French declined a short truce to bury the dead and to collect the wounded who are covering the field in front of the French battle line. "West of Augustow, in the Russian theatre of war, we have repulsed a Russian attack."

AUSTRIAN.

MRS. CARMAN'S FATE RESTS WITH JURYMEN; ACQUITTAL LOOKED FOR

Woman Charged With Murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey Confident of Being Freed.

JUDGE'S CHARGE FAIR

Justice Kelby Addresses Jury in Monotone, Displaying No Partiality Regarding Outcome.

Mineola, L. I., Oct. 24.—Twelve long Island farmers and business men, all married, are debating tonight the verdict they shall bring in the case of Mrs. Florence Conklin Carman, charged with the murder of Mrs. Louise Duryea Bailey.

At 9:44 o'clock, after having delivered a charge occupying 23 minutes, Justice Kelby delivered the case into the hands of the jury. In just 64 minutes there came a rap that signified that the jury wished to return to court. Immediately there was great excitement throughout the court house. Mrs. Carman was brought in from an anteroom. She composed herself, smiled at a few friends and sat back in her chair, making visible efforts to appear at ease.

But it was not to deliver their verdict that the jury wished to return to court. They had started debating the evidence and merely wished to have a portion of the testimony read to them. Before this could be done, however, the jury changed its mind and was not brought into the courtroom. Once more the tenseness set in. Mrs. Carman went back to the anteroom and her father and mother, husband and daughter and the other members of the family conversed in low tones in a corner of the court room.

Judge's Charge Is Impartial.

Justice Kelby's charge was considered fair and impartial. It was delivered in a passionless monotone, betraying no interest in the case other than to see impartial justice done. But just before the judge started his final exhortation to the jury, District Attorney Smith had said to a few newspaper men that he expected the jury to acquit Mrs. Carman.

Justice Kelby told them they could find the defendant guilty of murder in the first or second degree or of manslaughter in the first or second degree. More of his charge was devoted to defining the different degrees.

Mrs. Carman's nervousness was more noticeable during the judge's charge and after the retirement of the jury for deliberation than at any time during the trial except when her daughter, Elizabeth, and her mother, Mrs. Platt Conklin, were testifying in her behalf. While Justice Kelby was delivering his charge she bit her lips and shifted nervously in her chair, but as the jury retired she beamed brightly on some of her friends who sat near the railing of the court.

After the first few minutes, after the excitement of the jury leaving the room had calmed, the strain asserted itself. Her conversation in the anteroom became disjointed, almost incoherent, it was reported, and when the first summons from the jury room came she was so excited that it required a terrific effort of the will for her to pull herself together.

Defendant Expects Acquittal.

Once in her seat, however, it was plain that she assured well from the prompt communication from the jury chamber. That she expected to be acquitted within a few minutes was obvious to the most casual observer. Her excitement grew but it was a pleasurable excitement.

When the real import of the summons from the chamber of life or death dawned upon her, when she realized that the relaxed tension of waiting must be taken up again, the reaction was correspondingly severe. It was a greater ordeal than she had counted on apparently and little by little her remaining self confidence seemed to ooze away from her.

The ordeal of waiting seemed to be even more severe for Dr. Carman than for his wife. Perhaps it was only that her will was stronger, her nerve better, but at any rate, severe as was the strain upon the woman, it was more severe upon her husband. He seemed like a man about to be led to his death. His face was pallid; ghastly. His forehead was drenched with perspiration and when he spoke his voice was broken with the effort of gulping down the great sobs of nervousness that threatened to choke his utterance completely.

As the minutes wore on, the hopes of all of Mrs. Carman's family and friends for acquittal lessened. District Attorney Smith's prophecy of a verdict of not guilty had not been repeated to them, but at the beginning they had been as confident of a full vindication as he had. When the first hour had passed and the second was well along, however, the first wavering doubt was voiced by one of the Carman party.

Disagreement Considered.

"Perhaps it will be a disagreement," was the word spoken. But no one of them seemed to think anything worse than this could be borne through the little door by the 12 men whose final word they were so anxiously waiting.

The night session had opened immediately after the jurors had retired from dinner. Justice Kelby began his charge without delay. He said in part:

"You have been told frequently during the course of the trial that this is the law of the state. I want you to have that in mind throughout the case. You must determine what the facts are, irrespective of what either the counsel say or what I have said, or will say. You must judge the case and then render your verdict according to the facts. The defendant starts out with the presumption that she is innocent. The defendant is charged with causing the death of Mrs. Louise D. Bailey and the indictment in effect charges her with killing her with intent to kill. That is homicide."
