

What Society is Doing BY NONA LAWLER

THIS evening the Knights Templar club will give its opening dance for the year at the Masonic Temple. These parties are among the most enjoyable affairs in the social calendar. There is a splendid spirit of camaraderie, which always prevails between the Knights and ladies, and has served to make the dances popular. The officers and their wives will receive the guests this evening, and it is planned to have the guests fall into the receiving line as they arrive, thus introducing everybody and forming the line for the grand march. H. C. Thompson will present the guests to the receiving line. The officers for this season are: Frank McCallis, president, A. H. Averill, L. H. Stevens and Jerry Bronough.

cult for him to work in the interests of the public.

"I wish the philosophy of this would be understood throughout the state." The audience expressed approval of this thought by hearty applause.

Senator Lane reviewed the O. & C. railroad land grant, the terms of which were violated by the railroad company.

He pointed out that the Both-Kelly Lumber company had secured 7,000 acres of the grant, while thousands of persons who wanted to get portions of the grant upon which to make homes were unable to do so. He mentioned the government's suit to have the lands forfeited, and its success thus far.

fair, and occupies an enviable position.

"How long do you think it would take Mr. Booth to gain as important a place? Of course, he might get on the public lands committee."

"Senator Chamberlain has been industrious in behalf of the people of this state. He is by far the best man of the three who are seeking election. He doesn't own even 100 acres of timber land. He has kept poor. If he had been crooked or unfaithful he would have gotten rich. Senator Chamberlain has never thrown down the people of his state."

Fliegel Indorsed.
Senator Lane heartily indorsed A. F. Fliegel for congress. He said that Mr. Fliegel was tried when he served as a member of the Portland city council, and he was found always working in the interests of the people and for the public good.

"There are many men in congress who are not there in the interest of the people," he said. "You better send a man who is tried and true. Mr. Fliegel will make a valuable congressman. He is a man who loves peace."

"The danger that impresses me is that by some move of the opponents of President Wilson this country will be pushed into war. President Wilson needs men with him who will stand by him. He needs men in congress who have no interests to serve, except the public's."

Senator Lane also urged the election of Dr. C. J. Smith as governor.

Following Senator Lane's address, T. C. Burke, who presided, called upon Mr. Teal for a short address. He also called on T. O. Hague, candidate for state representative.

"In my observations in Washington, where I have come in contact with many public men," said Mr. Teal, "I will say from personal knowledge that there are few men in Washington who are more capable or stand higher than Senator Chamberlain."

want to see him reelected."

Mr. Teal told of the great pressure under which President Wilson was put during the Mexican crisis, when he was being jeered and scoffed at because he would not resort to armed intervention and plunge the country into war.

"President Wilson is a man of the highest ideals," he said. "He has the interests of the great mass of the people at heart."

He said when the new laws that have been enacted under the leadership of Wilson get into operation that a new standard in American life will be raised. The smaller man will have a better chance.

"The dollar mark will not be emblazoned everywhere," he declared. "The worship of the golden calf will pass to a large extent."

He said President Wilson has a definite policy he is endeavoring to carry out.

"I want to ask you," he said, "does not President Wilson at this time deserve your support?"

"As almost of one voice the audience loudly answered, 'Yes.'"

"How are you going to give him this support?" continued Mr. Teal.

Stand by Wilson.
"Are you going to send men to congress who tell you in advance that they are going to oppose the president?"

"On the one hand you have in Senator Chamberlain a man who has stood by the president. He has been tried and is true."

"On the other hand you have a man who tells you deliberately he will go, if elected, to oppose the president."

"I beg of you, not as a Democrat, but as a citizen of Oregon, that you will send to both the senate and the house of representatives men who will give support to these policies. Don't send men who will break down and tear down the policies of this great man."

A WELCOMING HAND

By Jessie Roberts.

"Can you remember, girls," Bessie wanted to know, as we sat around the table after lunch one warm Saturday, thinking our lucky stars that we didn't have to go back to work that day, "do you remember how you felt when you first started in to earn your living? How strange it all was, and how horribly lonely you were, there in the office among a crowd of girls who seemed to have known each other all their lives and to have no use on earth for you."

"I should say I do remember," Rose asserted. "I almost died of shyness and loneliness the first few months. I didn't seem to know how to get acquainted, and I was always making mistakes that some one had scornfully to set right. It was miserable."

"Well, don't you think our club ought to see that a newcomer to her office or shop gets the glad hand and is made to feel that working women have hearts as well as brains, you know? For a brief while we do seem to have real brains to the new girl."

"Sort of committee of welcome of one, eh?" Nellie put in.

"Sure. One's enough, for if one takes a little trouble to help the new girl feel at ease and among friends, the rest will follow suit. You see, we just don't think. We are busy with our own affairs, and we don't realize how hard things are for the girl who is strange to it all. I don't mean that we should lay ourselves out to give her a good time, or invite her home till we know her better, but I do think we ought to try to make her feel she isn't a rank outsider, that we are glad to have her work with us, and glad to help her in any little way we can."

"We're with you," we said. "There'll

Lafayette Has New Waterworks System

Lafayette, Or., Oct. 28.—The water works system just completed at this place has met the required tests and experts claim the supply of water an installation of plant is one of the best in the state. An idea of the volume of water from the well which supplies the town may be got by saying that after a continuous test of 30 hours, the water shows no loss of head. The amount pumped exceeded 150,000 gallons in 24 hours. The system consists of approximately four and one-half miles of main, 35 hydrants, tank tower, large pump and motor.

The work has been accomplished in record time and is the completion of a 10 years' struggle for water at this place.
