

WHEN THE ARTS OF PEACE GIVE WAY TO WAR QUEER SIGHTS ENSUE

ALGERIAN CAVALRYMEN PASSING THROUGH PARIS

A group of swarthy African horsemen on their way to the front to fight for the French republic. Men from four continents and representing many races are now involved in the great conflict now raging in Europe and the outcome of which none can foretell. ENGLAND'S HOME DEFENSE BRIGADE ASSEMBLED

Painters, sculptors, actors and journalists of England have banded together for the home defense of the mother country. The members are here seen assembled in Earl's court, London, where they were addressed by Major General Sir Alfred Turner. In the ranks are many distinguished men of letters.

ON THE BATTLEFIELD NEAR RHEIMS

This photograph shows gun intrenchments erected by the Germans near Rheims, which were hurriedly abandoned when the kaiser's men retreated. Great excavations have been made in the midst of a harvest field to provide protected places for the field guns which, however, were not abandoned when the army withdrew.

THE ALGERIANS AT ARRAS

Here are a group of fighting men from sunny Africa who have taken part in some bitter engagements in northern France. Their Arab garb is in striking contrast to the uniforms of their French colleagues, but the wearers are said not to suffer in fighting qualities therefor. Their conduct in action is superb.

GERMAN PRISONERS BEING ESCORTED TO CAMP

These warriors were captured near Rheims, and are being escorted by some French cuirassiers to the concentration camp near Paris, where they will be held captive until the war is over, or until an exchange of prisoners may have been effected between Germany and France.

AUSTRIAN INFANTRYMEN IN ACTION

Aside from being the first nation to plunge into war, Austria has not made herself especially conspicuous in military achievement thus far. And frequent are the predictions that when the conflict is over, the disputed provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina will pass under control of Serbia.
