Hoosier Ghost Did Not Know the Law

Allowed Statute of Limitations to Void Forgotten Will Before Appearing to Reveal Its Whereabouts.
Danville, Ind., Nov. 21.—Ghosts that reveal forgotten wills should not wait 44 years before doing so, and the supreme court of this state has served notice to that effect. The case was one brought by Jasper Craven against his mother, Adeline Barker Craven, for the possession of a farm.
The farm had belonged to Mrs. Craven's brother, Jasper Barker, who was killed in the battle at Marietta, Ga., in the Civil war. Mrs. Craven held title to the farm and none questioned her claim until Jasper Craven, the nephew, reported that his uncle's ghost had appeared to him and revealed a will that was in the possession of an old comrade of Barker. Sure enough, the will was found, and the suit was brought successfully in the lower court. But the supreme court reversed the verdict because of the statute of limitation, and said:
"While it may have been the intention of the uncle to bestow upon the appellee the real estate, yet if he had the power to appear to the nephew and disclose the existence of the will his failure to make the facts known for 44 years has effectually barred the nephew's right to recover."

Epidemic Is Hard On Educated Pigs

Quarantine Against Foot and Mouth Disease Does Not Discriminate in Favor of Vaudeville Performers.
Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—In refusing a vaudeville concern now playing at Detroit permission to ship its pigs, used in the act, to Cleveland, the department of agriculture not only decided that "pigs is pigs," whether trained or untrained, but it dealt a severe blow at the theatrical business. Circuses are also hit.
Practically all theatrical acts will have to be withdrawn from the vaudeville circuits. The embargo does not prevent the shipment of trained ponies and dogs.
"The department does not give educated pigs any privileges that uneducated pigs do not have," said one official. "All pigs look alike to us."
Reports from Detroit that Canada had quarantined against the shipment of eggs from the United States to the dominion were received with doubt by the department.

FELIX SLOPER REMANDED

Felix Sloper, the 17-year-old boy highwayman, must look to Municipal Judge Stevenson for punishment, for Judge Gates, of the juvenile court, yesterday remanded the youth to the city court to answer for his crimes. Sloper's age prevented his being sent to the reform school. This left Judge Gates no alternative as he has no power as juvenile judge to sentence him to any other punishment in keeping with his offences. Sloper confessed he held up two women on November 12 and 14, securing about $12 the first night and 55 cents the second.
