ABOUT NINE BILLS A MINUTE IS PACE SET IN THE HOUSE

Proposed Measures Have to Do With Many Things From Prohibition to Hay.

SCHUEBEL HAS RECORD

Tax Legislation and Action of Fisheries Abuses Included in the Record.

(Salem Bureau of The Journal.) Salem, Or., Jan. 12.—With a rush this morning the first wave of the expected deluge of bills swept down upon the house.

Mr. Schuebel asked that his bill permitting cities to construct joint water works systems be passed on to third reading at once.

He said an emergency exists in Clackamas, where Oregon City and West Lynn wish to join in constructing waterworks, and will vote on a bond issue January 23.

Mr. Schuebel also had a bill to kill the "insidious lobby" by requiring a register of lobbyists and sworn statements of the expenses of such lobbyists.

Mr. Schuebel presented a bill to help out merchants who sell hay and grain and have had trouble in enforcing collections under the present law.

The Clatsop delegation introduced a measure establishing a bounty on seals for the benefit of the Columbia river fishermen.

Mr. Kelly of The Dalles presented a bill restoring to sheriffs the task of collecting taxes now laid upon county treasurers.

Mr. Houston, of Multnomah, fulfilled his pledge to the women of the state by presenting his two bills allowing women to serve on grand and petit juries.

Chairman Forbes of the committee on rules reported early in the morning that with a meeting called after last night's session he hoped to have the rules in form.

It was known at that time that the question of clerk hire and stenographer services was the big point of dispute that held up the report.

Mr. Horns, of Multnomah, contributed a bill providing for the registration of teachers, and putting teachers of music under the direction of the superintendent of public instruction.

Mr. Thoms of Marion presented a bill to help out merchants who sell hay and grain and have had trouble in enforcing collections under the present law.

REASONS FOR BELGIAN RELIEF APPEAL ARE PRESENTED IN DETAIL

German Invasion Came Before Crops Were Harvested and Residents Helpless.

GERMANS COULDN'T HELP

Allies Were Seeking to Starve Out the Invaders, and Germans Saved All Available Food Supplies.

Why should it be necessary for the United States to feed Belgium?

The Oregon Belgian relief commission received today information that tells why.

The German invasion came before crops had been harvested. By August 21, last, two thirds of the country was overrun.

The country had produced about 40 per cent of the food needed by the population of between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000.

Sixty per cent of the food had been imported, but importations ceased when the ports of Antwerp and Ostend were closed.

With crops destroyed, imports stopped, industry paralyzed, starvation came to millions of Belgians.

The Germans could not feed the Belgians, because, as a war measure, the allies were striving to conquer Germany by starvation, and it was necessary to husband all food supplies.

The information received by the Oregon commission from the national relief commission brands as canards reports that Germans have appropriated American food contributions for military purposes, and that they have hoarded their own.

Belgium had not the United States' "soft hearted." Nor is any tax being placed by Germans on food for the Belgians, given by the United States, declares the commission.

"Food is by all odds the greatest necessity," reads the statement. "The people of Belgium can doubtless get through this winter alive with what clothes, fuel and blankets they have already. They cannot survive without food."

Samuel Hill, chairman of the Oregon relief commission, received this morning a second letter from General Yungblut, commander of the Belgian army, written at the direction of King Albert, and saying that he greatly appreciates and is deeply touched by the sympathy and generosity of Oregon people in their care for his starving subjects.

Ed Koskela was caught in the machinery of the mill while at work and sustained fatal injuries.
