

CAPT. SPENCER QUITS MOTOR BOAT RACING FOLLOWING DECREE

Man Who Put Portland on Power-Craft Speed Map Resents Verdict.

ASTORIA DECISION IRKS

Power Boat Association's Ruling to Disregard Regatta Protest Causes Skipper's Ire.

Capt. E. W. Spencer has left the speed boat game. He did not approve of the election of the Pacific International Power Boat Association in sustaining its former decision at the re-hearing of the protest of the owners of the Wastral, a Seattle boat, against the decision of the Astoria racing committee in the second heat of the 16-foot class race at Astoria, July 4, 1914.

In the opinion of Leonard Myers, who represented the Portland Motor Boat club at the re-hearing in Tacoma a week ago yesterday, Captain Spencer was given an unfair deal. Other local followers of the motor boat game, who know the inside of the case, are of the opinion that the P. I. P. B. A. officials discriminated against Captain Spencer.

Parts of the report of W. H. Curtis, chairman of the racing committee, to the P. I. P. B. A., gives an account of the causes of the protest, which are as follows: "The records of the meet show that the race during which the cause of the protest arose was a postponed event and was scheduled to be run off at 4 a. m. The race was called and run on time, and was completed at 8:15 a. m."

"The protest was handed in writing to the racing committee a few minutes before 12 o'clock of the same day. "The preparatory signal of three whistles was blown at 7:15 a. m. The second warning signal was blown at 7:45 a. m. After the second warning signal, and when all of the boats were on the course it was discovered that one of the buoys forming the turn at the lower end of the course, which was to be used for this race, had disappeared. No committee boats were at hand at this early hour which could be substituted for the missing buoy and no suitable means existed for calling in the racing boat and advising them as to the running of the course. The Baby Bell crew, having discovered that the buoy was missing, ran slowly by the flagship, asking for instructions and was told to run the course as the existing buoys marked it. An attempt was made to get the missing instructions to two other boats which rounded the flagship at the same time, but without success."

"The race was started at 8:00 a. m. Shortly after the race was started and without instructions from the committee, a boat commanded by C. H. Haddix, commodore of the Astoria Motor Boat club, proceeded down the course and anchored in a position, approximately 300 yards from the location of the buoy, thus disregarding fully this distance off the prescribed course. The racing committee, not having issued instructions to this boat, thought nothing of the procedure and made no attempt to get the boat to act as a mark, as it was then considered unwise and likely to confuse the racing boats."

"Baby Bell Rounds Turn. "As the Baby Bell heading rounded the one remaining buoy of the turn in question, it was noticed from the flagship that Commodore Haddix' boat was attempting to flag the racing boats around the Haddix boat, it being their evident intention to act as a mark. The committee, in view of her instructions, disregarded the flag. The Wastral, following the Bell, headed the flag and rounded the Haddix' boat. The committee, a boat then being available immediately, put out to the Haddix boat, calling it within the course and instructed them to cease flagging. This they did and on the next and all following laps all racing boats rounded only the one remaining buoy of the lower turn."

"Leonard Myers gave out the following statement upon his return from Tacoma: 'Captain Spencer and I were given an unfair deal. When the facts were presented and the ballot was taken, the majority for sustaining the former decision and one against. There were present at the meeting some members of the P. I. P. B. A. Wayland, one of the protesting owners, did not vote. Two of the men were from Seattle, two from Tacoma, one from Astoria, and myself. "During the stating of facts, C. H. Haddix of Astoria, said that he came back the flagship at 7:30 a. m. and Dr. Tuttle, another member of the racing committee on board, and that he was given orders to go down and act as a stake boat. He said he

ALL OF THE CATCHES AT OREGON CITY ARE NOT SALMON

Collection of photographs showing catches during the week on the Willamette. On the right is Jack King of the Journal composing room, with a very valuable catch. It was made on the edge of the mill race below the falls. It consisted of 17 different salmon outfits that became snagged in an old anchor rope that refused to pull loose until King hooked it. There are spinners, hooks, swivels, leaders, sinkers and spreaders. It was more valuable than any salmon that could be pulled out and some of the spinners reveal the fact that they have been in the anchor rope for a year or so. On the left is Aaron Frank and a day's limit caught at Oregon City early one morning last week with six-ounce rod and nine-strand line. Below is a catch made by James B. Welch and George Kinnear.
