

FEDERAL CONTROL OF STATE RESOURCES IS TOPIC OF DISCUSSION

Governors and Former Governors at Seattle Conference Differ on Subject.

WEST DEPLORES WASTE

"Outrage the Way the Resources of the States Have Been Handled," Says Former Governor.

Seattle, May 19.—(P. N. S.)—Federal control of public lands, water, power, water power sites and other great resources of the west offers the only solution of the conservation problem. State control has proven itself inadequate and ineffectual, and has resulted in the virtual giving away of millions of dollars' worth of valuable public resources and the dissipating of the great heritage with which nature endowed the western states.

These are the opinions of Governor Emmett D. Boyle of Nevada, expressed before the fourth annual conference of governors of western states in Seattle today. Modified to some extent they are also the views of former Governor Oswald West of Oregon. They are not, however, the views of Governor George A. Carlson of Colorado, and in the dissenting opinion which Governor Carlson advanced was found the choice of material for discussion offered the conference today.

"The states are simply clamoring for an opportunity to give away more of their resources," said Governor Boyle. "It is an outrage the way the resources of the states have been handled," declared West.

Governor Carlson of Colorado offered vigorous opposition to the position taken by Governor Boyle and declared that in his state the people were capable of handling their public resources in a conservative manner better than they could be administered by the federal government. He declared that the people of his state should be invested with authority to control and to regulate their own public resources.

Discussion of the Ferris water power bill now before congress featured today's session of the governors and provoked the opinions quoted. The principal addresses were given by Governor West of Oregon, ex-Governor James H. Hawley of Idaho, Governor Carlson and Governor Boyle.

As guests of the Bremerton Commercial club the governors spent this afternoon visiting the Puget Sound navy yard.

BISHOP SAYS HE BELIEVES FUND INTACT

The total of the trust shows a gratifying increase during Bishop Scadding's episcopacy, so I have every reason to believe that even though there are no accounts available showing the receipts and expenditures of these years, undoubtedly they were accounted for to Bishop Scadding from time to time.

deated when they established the fund. Failing to do this, the income is expended as the bishop may desire. "My predecessors have not felt called upon to report to the convention the amount of the fund. In this they were perfectly within their rights, and I haven't a doubt they acted with wisdom."

However, Bishop Sumner said that at the outset of his work as bishop he wished to call the attention of the convention to the accounts, that the First National bank had been appointed treasurer of the funds, and that a reputable real estate firm had been placed in charge of the real estate to conserve and improve it. The mortgaged would be handled by Rodney L. Gilliam and William MacMaster as heretofore, he said.

"How better could I safeguard the fund than this I do not know," said the bishop.

Bishop Sumner called attention to the canon requiring parish treasurers to be bonded, and asked that it be enforced.

Pension System Indorsed. He indorsed the pension system for aged and retired clergymen, and urged that provision on pension policies be paid promptly.

Particularly was he interested in pensions, he said, so that the clergy could devote all their time and thought to the things of the church, without worry about old age.

"One of the virtues of our ministry is that of specialization, as in any other age, we can best do God's work by having a mind and spirit single to his work."

Referring to the grants given Oregon annually by the general missionary board of the church, Bishop Sumner said he should never be satisfied as long as Oregon is receiving these grants.

"Next year I hope that we can ask for a reduced grant, at least," he said, "and continue to receive less and less each year until we are standing alone."

"Heartily opposed" was the phrase employed to express his attitude toward the plan to obtain funds for church purposes.

"I believe it is easier to raise funds for work in advance than afterward," he said. "It is an uninspiring and deadly load and task, this carrying of interest charges."

The Good Samaritan hospital was commended to the support of the diocese, with the recommendation that steps be taken at once to build a new wing to take the place of the principal part of the present building.

The bishop said that for this work a benefactor is wanted, as is also the case, he said, with St. Helen's hall, which he proposed to rebuild. He said that wealthy citizens of Portland and Oregon, irrespective of religious faith, should give of their means.

St. Helen's Hall Prosperous. Despite the loss of its building, the bishop reported that St. Helen's has had a prosperous year, and that the mother superior of the order of the Sisters of St. John, who was in Portland in March, pledged continued support for the institution, so that Portland people may not worry about the maintenance, but may devote themselves to provide a new building, either on the old or a new site.

St. Elizabeth's house the bishop regretted had been closed, but the hope is that it may be reopened. Scadding house, he said, should be put on a more substantial basis.

As to the Bishop Scott school for boys in Yamhill county, Bishop Sumner reported that it had failed as an institution. The present location, he said, is unfavorable and even inaccessible as a site for a school. Last year there were six pupils, this year an average of 10. The deficit last year was nearly $8000.

Bound to Be Deficit. "There is bound to be a deficit each year of that I am certain," said the bishop.

He recommended that the school be closed, and application made to the courts for the right to dispose otherwise of the fund left for the support of the institution.

"I am sorry that I have had to deal with temporal matters so largely in this, my first charge to you," said Bishop Sumner in conclusion. "I hope will be more of a spiritual nature. For it matters not how prosperous we make the church financially, if it lacks Christian fervor, spiritual fire, all our works will be dead."

Communion was administered, Bishop Sumner being assisted in giving the sacrament by Dean Ramsey and Rev. T. F. Bowen of St. Michael's and All Angels' church.

The business session of the diocese convened at Trinity parish house at noon. Luncheon was served at 1 o'clock and business was continued at 2:30.
