Peter Rabbit Has a Shock.

When he have tried and tried again to do some thing or other. Just try and try and try some more. And never mind the bother.

Peter Rabbit was trying to live up to that. Yes, he had tried and he had almost ready to give up and not try any more, and then he had thought he would try just once more, and so he had kept on trying. Now, if it had been something really worth while this would have been very fine of Peter, but the truth is the thing Peter was trying to do wasn't worth while at all. If he succeeded he wouldn't be any bit better off than he was. His curiosity would be satisfied. Peter is just like a great many people, spending time and a great deal of effort to do something not worth doing at all.

Now, please don't laugh when I tell you what it was that Peter was trying so hard to do. Very likely you have tried just as hard to do something just as foolish. Peter was trying to find out just how many babies Uncle Billy Possum had. Uncle Billy couldn't tell him or wouldn't tell him. Peter wasn't sure which. All he would say was that he had a plenty and invited Peter to count them. So at last, once every day Peter visited that part of the Green Forest where Uncle Billy makes his home and counts the babies. One day he counted eight and went home satisfied that he had the right number. He told everybody he met that Uncle Billy had eight babies. The next day he counted nine. He counted them three times, and each time he made nine. That day, on his way home, he told everybody that he had been mistaken and that Uncle Billy had nine babies instead of eight. The day after that he counted 10, and this time he kept his tongue still on the way home, for he didn't want to be laughed at.

He was back again the day following to make sure about the 10, and lo! behold! he couldn't make but eight to save him. You see, they were very lively babies and looked just alike. Some would be scrambling around on the ground and some would be clinging to the coat of their mother, and some would be in that little pocket in her apron, and as they kept changing places Peter never could be quite sure that he hadn't counted some of them twice. It was a regular puzzle, and it got so that when Peter didn't have anything else to do he would go over and try to count the Possum babies.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Dan J. Malarkey Injured.

Dan J. Malarkey is now carrying his right arm in a sling. If you want a learned disquisition on the mechanism of the front end of an automobile and the wrist ask him. A peculiar feature is that it was not Dan's automobile but that of a friend. "I was playing the good samaritan," explains Dan, "and this is what I got for it."

The legal authorities are being studied to determine whether a suit for damages will lie or not.

pany. The plaintiff concedes that the irrigation company is entitled to the 1100 miners inches that has been diverted heretofore for irrigation purposes, but denies its right to appropriate an additional 5000 miners inches since the filing upon the water by the Hydro-Electric company for electric power and lighting purposes.

The plaintiff in the suit concedes the right of riparian rights along the river, but alleges that the irrigation company has no right to divert this amount of water from the river and keep it away from the plaintiff company. The Hydro-Electric company has an investment of approximately $175,000 in its electric light and power plant. The irrigation district has just finished spending $50,000 in betterments.

The suit filed by the Hydro-Electric company is similar to the one filed by the Oregon Lumber company several months ago and it is expected that the Pacific Power & Light company, that has a large power plant in operation on Hood river, together with the Farmers' Irrigation company that has filed on power rights on the river, that will be effected by the diversion of the water proposed to be taken by the East Fork Irrigation District, will also file suits in order to protect their rights.

The plants depending upon the water from Hood River with which to operate that are located below the intake of the East Fork Irrigation District, represent a total investment of approximately $350,000.
