NEW SEAMEN'S BILL GOES IN EFFECT HERE WITHOUT A RIPPLE

Effort to Live Up to the Law Brings Shipping Men Temporary Respite. At midnight last night the much discussed, cussed and famous seamen's bill became an operative law.

As a result the whole Pacific coast, from San Francisco to Honolulu, was watching to see what would happen. To the disappointment of many, however, the act went into effect without any of the trouble predicted.

The result was that all vessels were cleared at all Pacific coast ports at least. The only excitement here arose over the preparation of the steamer Northern Pacific for the inspection under the new law. Examinations were held on board that steamer this morning with Captain Hammerstrom, First Officer Steinhilber and Second Officer Erikson of the light house tender Heather and Captain Oscar Wicklund, master of the Point Adams life saving station, as the examiners. The steamer carried a number of men who retained the professional as well as the physical examination. It was confidently expected that the steamer would be cleared on time or shortly thereafter.

Inspectors Edwards and Fuller announced this morning that of the 61 sailors who have taken examinations here so far 13 have failed. These failures were all due to physical shortcomings and not to the professional examinations.

Assistant Inspectors Meany and Wildon were this morning busy on the Big Three liner Rose City, which is to be the first vessel inspected under the new law. Certain changes in boat equipment and arrangements were necessary on all steamers but had been complied with in advance by all lines.

Collector of Customs Burke this morning made it plain to all steamship men that the order temporarily

SANTA CLARA DEATH ROLL TO REACH TOTAL OF AT LEAST TWELVE

Four of Crew and Some Passengers Missing; Eight Bodies Identified. Marshallfield, Or., Nov. 4.—The death list of the Santa Clara wreck will include at least 12. In addition to the eight identified dead whose bodies have been recovered, four of the crew are missing. They are:

John Weller, first assistant engineer; Manuel Tello, a fireman; Tom Farrell, mess boy, and Robert Shearer, winch driver.

Local Agent Nott has made every effort since the wreck to check up on the crew, and has told all the others of the crew to help look for the missing men. They have not been found, and without doubt, they are dead. Weller and Tello were last seen in the water. Besides these missing sailors, there are seven of the passengers not accounted for. It is thought that most of them are probably with friends or have failed to report. There may, however, be some who are dead. The passengers not accounted for are: T. Gaff, Fred Jones, S. Collins and G. Allen, W. G. Marquard and Henry Kanak.

The last two identified of the eight dead are Mrs. S. Calbreck of Salem, who was coming here to visit relatives, and Mrs. L. Cullen, who was identified by Rev. Father Hogan of North Bend as being housekeeper for Rev. Father Black, Portland rector, who was coming here.

GERMANS PLAN FOR SUBMARINE BASE BLOCKED

Second Vessel Carrying Two Submarines and Loaded With Arms, Ammunition, Picked Up by Dutch Ship. San Francisco, Nov. 4.—(U. P.)—News of an attempt by Germany to establish a submarine and naval base in the South Pacific from which it was planned to dispatch fleets of underwater craft to prey upon the commerce of the allied nations was brought here today by the submarine John McDonald of the American and the tanker Frank H. Buck which arrived today after eight months' voyage.

The confirmation of the report received here a month ago that the American tanker Maverick, one of Fred Jensen's mystery ships, which left here in the month ago, carried a submarine, eight months ago, was confirmed by the tanker John McDonald of the American and the tanker Frank H. Buck which arrived today after eight months' voyage.

Planned to Establish Base in South Pacific. Vessel Flew U. S. Flag; Was Part of Same Expedition as the Maverick.

San Francisco, Nov. 4.—(U. P.)—News of an attempt by Germany to establish a submarine and naval base in the South Pacific from which it was planned to dispatch fleets of underwater craft to prey upon the commerce of the allied nations was brought here today by the submarine John McDonald of the American and the tanker Frank H. Buck which arrived today after eight months' voyage.

The confirmation of the report received here a month ago that the American tanker Maverick, one of Fred Jensen's mystery ships, which left here in the month ago, carried a submarine, eight months ago, was confirmed by the tanker John McDonald of the American and the tanker Frank H. Buck which arrived today after eight months' voyage.

More Submarines Found. But this was only one feature of the plot and another ship was taken into the port of Batavia at the same time the Maverick was apprehended and in her hold were found two more submarines, thousands of rifles and machine guns and millions of rounds of ammunition.

Germany's attempt to carry the European war into the Pacific has been frustrated, in the belief of Captain McDonald, temporarily at least. But the plans of the Kaiser did not miscarry though the submarine was British. It was the Dutch, according to Captain McDonald, who unscrupulously scheme and but for them, he said, today Germany would now be operating submarines from a hidden base in an attempt to cut off the troop and food supplies of England from Australia and possibly attacking the Japanese boats in this ocean.

Vessel's Lights Out. The ship which was captured with the Maverick was managed as up to the time that Captain McDonald left Batavia its identity had not been ascertained. It was sailing through the Java sea in the same direction as the Maverick and apparently to the same destination when a Dutch warship picked her up one night and ordered her to stop. Her lights were out at the time she was picked up and it was only through the fact that the warship almost ran her down that the strange craft was discovered.

Name Plaque Was Removed. An name had been carefully erased and every name plate and builders' sign removed. Her papers were faulty and nothing could give a satisfactory account of the ship. The name was flying the American flag. The munitions and submarines were disclosed in a search in Batavia later, but the captured German submarine, the Dutch officials never discovered the name of the ship. It is presumed, however, that it sailed from this country, probably from New York.

The location of Germany's intended base has never been disclosed, according to Captain McDonald. Hundreds of islands northeast of Australia or an offshoot of the coast of this country itself, all are suspected.

Singapore Meeting Failed. The Buck arrived at Singapore a few days after the mutiny there. It was that after a mistake in signals had led the white residents of the ship were not killed by the Bengal soldiers who mutinied, according to McDonald. "The Germans," said the captain, "had capitulated to the mutiny. One wealthy German of Singapore, spent $2,000,000 among the Indian troops. It was understood that the outbreak was to begin at night and that the German prisoners were to be liberated from the stocks and lead the troops. But there was a mistake in signals and the mutiny began in the afternoon. The Germans were liberated as planned but they walked off and refused to lead the white residents of the ship."

The British residents organized to defend themselves and soon quelled the mutineers. They fled into the jungle and most of them were later caught. They were executed when we were there—eight or 10 at a time as they were returned from the forest. Each one of them had in his possession from $10 to $500 which is a fortune for them. The wealthy German who financed the rebellion fled and is now in Batavia."
