is a tinge of pessimism to dampen the hopes of their friends, due to the feeling that all this labor may be in vain when some unnamed tribune gains the floor and nominates Hughes. Here and there is found one who thinks the party may not want Hughes as badly as it thinks when the leaders have talked it all over. It is agreed that he would not be a man who could be easily handled if he became the nomince, but this observation cuts both ways. The conservatives mistrust him because of his assumed independence of bossism, while the pro- ania, gressives have misgivings concerning e course his independence might take. During and since the squabble of 1912 Justice Hughes has been a polit cal hermit. He is not criticized for that, for his judicial station forbids governor of New York, and his ideas are largely unknown. The reactionaries, who are talking Hughes quite "Henry Ford, most democratic of The town of San Diego Undamaged,"

"Henry Ford, most democratic of The town of San Diego remains as much as the liberal element, are men, was financing an autocracy, and virtually undamaged, and supple-

New Yorker is essentially of a conservative turn of mind, and they chite mire that progressive 'fads' would not find favor with him. The Case of Taft. It is recalled that Taft was also termed a progressive when he became the heir presumptive, and he had been impatient of bossism. But he was of "the judicial furn of mind," and when the final test came, he fell into the arms of the bosses. Whether or not his judicial training had anything to do with it is a matter that will remain undecided, but there is a tradition among politicians that a judge has a tendency toward conservatism.

These things are being weighed as the Hughes talk goes on, and they are likely to be heard more and more if Hughes becomes the "man of the hour." in the first thought of "reuniting the party" some other things were forgotten, and the progress that Hughes might make as a nominee against Wilson is a subject of doubt.

Meanwhile the progressive Republicans in congress are becoming tangled over the reported desire of Senator La Follette to win some of the western states. Conferences have resulted for the purpose of trying to agree on a division of territory, so that Cummins and La Follette will not split the progressive strength in primary contests.

Burton continues to be regarded as the leader of the old guard candidates, and his friends cling to the hope that progressives may also be brought to favor him. He is to be the main buffer in the primary contests in the western states, as plans are now arranged, where Cummins or other progressive elements are not too strong. This will put him in line for a big prize if he is crowded out by Hughes or someone else at Chicago, should the Republicans win the presidency. His friends suggest he would make a good secretary of state or head of the treasury if he misses the main chance.

Preparedness Program Gains Strength. Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the senate committee on military affairs, hopes to close hearings on the preparedness program by the end of January. He announces his Intention to keep the committee at work until the task is finished.

"I shall do all possible to advance i the consideration of the question of national defense to the floor of the senate," he says. "There are many witnesses to be heard, and the committee will sit from day to day until the work

Despite a widespread impression to the contrary, the administration is not nsisting upon any particular details of preparedness. In response to the demand for something definite to work upon, the war department formulated a plan which it deems adequate. This plan, however, is not regarded as a finished product, or one that may not be varied to correspond with other opinions. The administration is concerned as to the essential fact, not as to detail. The continental army idea, so strongly advocated by Secretary Garrison, is apparently receding in strength and is unlikely to be adopted. This is because it runs counter to many of the army experts, who favor a larger standing army, and also meets opposition from the champions of the militia. Conceived in large measure as a compromise, it has fallen between two

San Francisco Jan. 29 .- (U. P.) -- Climate, that celebrated commodity of California, abounded today in more than 57 varieties. In Los Angeles it poured; in San Diego there were floods. Here, rain and snow mingled for six minutes. The weather man called an intermission, dished up rain for the second act, and closed the day with bright sunshine, cloudless skies and balmy air as the third act. Across the bay, there were snowball fights. Mount Tamalpias and Mount Diablo reared snowy heads. In the Sierras, snow 15 to 20 feet deep was reported. Northern California had cold weather-real, back east variety. Rain, snow or hail fell in central California, sometimes in copious quantities.

From everywhere, the climate sharks reported, "This is an unusual season." Official records confirmed their word, for in practically every nook and corner of the state, rainfall marks for January have eclipsed all records.
