"The Flying Torpedo," which Suppose it is 1920, and the United States is threatened with invasion. An offer of $1,000,000 is made for device that will make the country safe from the invader.

The "flying torpedo" is devised by the hero of the film. It will do the business. The enemy learns of the invention, and plots to gain possession of it.

The plot is foiled. The California coast is attacked, Enemy troops land, and rout the American army. Trench warfare is shown realistically. Everything goes against us until the flying torpedo is brought into play. Then everything is lovely. The U.

Nance O'Neil Star.

Nance O'Neil, whose stage success may almost be said to have started in Portland, is the star in the week end photoplay performance, "The Witch" which opened today at the Majestic. The play, which offers a splendid ve-hicle for Miss O'Neil's emotional talents, is adapted from Sardou's "Sorceress." It is located in Mexico and the plot deals of a physician and his daughter Zora (Miss O'Neil) and the military governor and his daughter Dolores. Both girls are in love with the same man Richet. Zora cures Delores of somnambulism just before the latter is to wed Richet. Zora learns of the coming wedding and hypnotizes Dolores only to be imprisoned as a witch. The governor, to get his daughter awakened, promises Dolores her liberty if she will remove the spell. Zora does, but the governor breaks faith with her. Richet discovers that he loves Zora more than Dolores and they elope. The play ends with the capture and burning of
