

CROWS, RATTLESNAKES AND COYOTES MET BY TRAIN CHASING VILLA

Vultures Spend Their Time Tidying Up the Desert After Villa Raiders Have Passed.

MEXICANS ARE FRIENDLY

Allow United States Army Men to Turn Horses and Mules Loose in Fields to Graze.

By H. D. Jacobs. (United Press Staff Correspondent.) With the United States Army in Northern Mexico, by courier to Columbus, N. M., telegram to El Paso, Texas, March 27.—Coyotes, vultures, carion crows and rattlesnakes are the chief native inhabitants of the Mexican regions so far penetrated by the American punitive expedition.

By night the camp is ringed by a circle of moaning coyotes, lurking just beyond the outposts in their stealthy pilgrimages for food. Their moonlight somnolence becomes familiar and irritating to the ears of the American soldiers.

Rattlesnake and Crow Day Singers. The rattlesnake and the crow are doing their singing by day, the snake with a pretzel-like arrangement appended to its rear, the crow with a sawing apparatus down in his vest.

Officers and Men Democratic. Inspiring relations exist between the officers and enlisted men. Demonstrations of democracy are of daily occurrence.

AVIATOR SAYS ARMY FLYERS MUST LEARN NEW WAY MEXICO

Lieutenant Bowen, Injured in Fall at Casas Grandes, Returns to El Paso.

AIR GUST CAUSED MISHAP

High Altitude and Rough Country Make High Speed Dangerous; But Speed Is Necessary in Landing.

El Paso, Texas, March 27.—(I. N. S.)—Lieutenant Thomas L. Bowen, of the army aviation corps, who fell 100 feet with a parachute at Casas Grandes last Sunday, has arrived here. The left side of his face is torn and swollen. His left eye is closed and his nose is broken. His body is covered with bruises.

Lieutenant Bowen broke the narrative to say that United States aviation must learn aviation all over again before they will be successful in Mexico. He claims that on account of the altitude it is impossible to land slowly.

Threatened by Mexicans. "I was in a tight place when only about 10 miles from the camp. My motor died and it was necessary to land on the desert with a dead motor."
