Close friends and relatives assembled to witness the ceremony which was read by Rev. G. P. Lening. The house was appropriately adorned with flowers, palms and ferns. The bridal party entered to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Miss Emma Insensee, who also accompanied Miss Laura Fleming, who sang "O Promise Me."

The bride was prettily attired in white silk poplin with lace trimmings, her veil was fastened with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white peonies and sweet peas. Bed Time Tales BY CLARA INGRAM JUDSON

Willy Wood-Rat Finds Somebody.

"ALL THE SAME," said Willy Wood-rat determinedly. "I mean to find something up here to play with—so there!" Willy was not easily fooled and he was quite put out to think he had been frightened by quiet Mrs. Bat in the first place and then that he had found nothing interesting in the hollow of the sycamore tree from which he had watched the bats come out.

"Of course, of course," agreed Mrs. Willy soothingly; "and there should have been something in that hollow. Willy, you are right about that. Bats must be stupid, careless creatures. The very idea of not storing up food shows that!" (Little did Mrs. Willy guess that the bats would have called her stupid! They would have said, "How silly to lay up food. If one cannot go and get food one can simply sleep, that's the sensible thing to do!" There's no accounting for tastes, you see.)

"But now that we are up on this tree," said Willy, looking around. "I guess I'll hunt around here a little. Maybe I will find something interesting after all."

And he did.

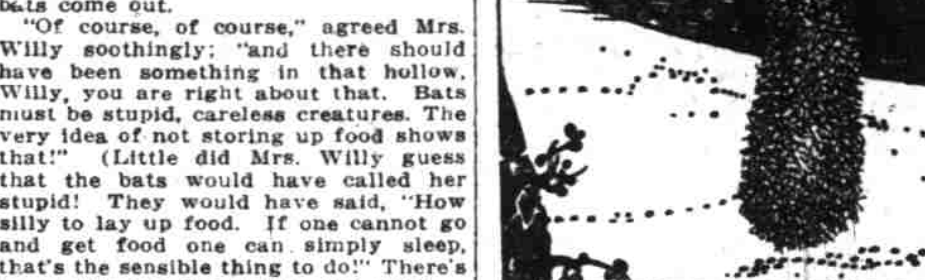

He walked out on one of the main branches of the tree till it got small and thin. So small and so thin that Willy had to use all his skill to keep from tumbling off. But the more the branch awayed and the more dangerous his trip became, the more determined was Willy to go clear to the tip, tip end just to see if he could.

When he was almost out at the end he spied something hanging from the branch.

"Now what can that be?" he asked. But as no one answered he decided to find out for himself. "It cannot be a bird's nest," he said; "because birds build their nests in the forks of the branches and this thing, whatever it is, hangs down loosely from the wood. It cannot be—"

"Don't be so sure about that," laughed a sweet little voice just underneath Willy Wood-rat, "because you might happen to be mistaken."

"Tomorrow—The Oriole's Nest."

"Don't be so sure about that," laughed a sweet little voice.

Lucky Willy was a pretty good climber, for he nearly fell off the branch as it was—he was that surprised.

"Now who are you?" he demanded. "I'm Lady Baltimore Oriole," laughed the same voice, "and I'm in my nest right here below you."

Willy twisted and looked and sure enough! Right there, perched upon that very queer thing he had been looking at, was a pretty little oriole—a beautiful creature of orange and black plumage.

"So that's your nest!" said Willy, his black eyes snapping with pleasure over the thought that he had found something new. "And why do you build it away out here on the branch?"

"That's easily answered," laughed Lady Baltimore Oriole. "I hang my nest downward from a slender branch, for then I know I am safe from prowlers. That's why."

TODAY'S BEAUTY TALK

You can make a delightful shampoo with very little effort and for a very trifling cost if you get from your druggist a package of canthrox and dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup ready water. Your shampoo is now ready. Just pour a little at a time on the scalp and rub briskly. This creates an abundance of thick, white lather that thoroughly dissolves and removes the dandruff, excess oil and dirt. After rinsing, the hair dries quickly, with a stiffness that makes it seem heavier than it is, and takes on a rich luster and a softness that make arranging it a pleasure.
