One afternoon when Rowdy was nothing more than a kid in St. Louis, he went out to the National league park, asked permission to practice with the Cardinals and got busy. They wanted somebody to catch while batting practice was on. Rowdy picked up a catcher's glove and started for the plate.

Instantly a blustery voice bellowed: "Hey, you little tramp, drop that, glove before I crown you with a bat."

I won't hurt your glove," timorously replied the diminutive Rowdy. "Drop it, I say. Drop it!" stormed the big leaguer. By this time Elliott was wild with rage. Walking over to the big eaguer, he threw the glove at his feet and opened up in this manner 'Say, you big stiff, some day you may be glad to have me use
