Electric-Driven Pump Is Being Rudyard Kipling Missed This Installed to Eliminate Any Water in Basement.

WORK DELAYED BY TESTS

Pederal Supervision Bequires That All Materials Entering Into Building Be First Analyzed at Washington.

C. J. Cook Co., to whom the contract for excavation on the new postoffice site has been let by Grant Fee, will probably start work with the mechan-With what little excavation has al-been found that the site has acted as of the subject. Obviously, surface soil.

In order to be on the safe side, an electric-driven pump has been in-stalled on the south side of the site for the removal of any water that might accumulate in the basement. At present the work seems to be moving, slow, which seems characteraccount of the system of supervision, Besides having a supervisor on the site during construction, the contractor cannot use any material or device in the structure without first having sent a sample of it to the government architect at Washington, D. C. There it is thoroughly sampled and accepted or rejected.

Mr. Fee's offices opposite the postoffice site on Broadway street have been sending out such samples in the regulation tin cans at the rate of several each day.

SUBMARINE BRINGS DOWN A ZEPPELIN IN MOST THRILLING WAY

One When He Described

satisfying to the most hardened novel reader is the plain story of the first submarine to bag a Zeppelin, as told by a representative of the British official press bureau. The details of this Jules Verne exploit are now made public for the first time. The story is as follows:

"When Rudyard Kipling wrote his thrilling stories of the doings of British submarines he confessed that he had merely taken examples haphazard ical shovels some time during the day. from the admiralty papers to which he had access, and that his 'Tales' by ready been done by day labor, it has no means exhausted the possibilities a sort of sponge, and has accumulated not, for it has just come to light that much underground water. The ground Kipling by his haphazard method has largely been filled in at some missed a real beauty—the first story prior time, and much sawdust, which of how a submarine, the E-31, in one acts as a rain storage, is beneath the breathless adventure destroyed a Zeppelin, dodged a cruiser, and missed destruction herself by a bare inch.

"E-31 was lying on the bottom somewhere in the North sea, when her commander thought he would see what was going on 'on top.' So up she came. Her luck was in. There, just to the northwest, only two or three istic of government construction, on hundred yards away, flying very low, and obviously in difficulties, was Zeppelin L-7, fresh from her expedition to the north of England.

"So E-31 decided not to show herself too much, but just to keep her eye on the prey, 'for,' she argued, 'mayhap some German cruiser will come o her assistance, and thenthough she waited and waited, following the L-7 as close as she dared, no cruiser appeared. Instead there hove into view an armed trawler, of which, for many reasons, she could not run foul. "And so, on the assumption that half a loaf is better than no bread, E-31 emerged and let fly at the Zeppelin at a range of about 100 yards with a 12-pounder. The first shot 850 blew away the center gondola. The next two landed full within the envelope. L-7 collapsed, and, burning flercely, plunged headlong into the waters of the North sea.

"Those of her crew who escaped the wreckage swam to the E-31, and she picked some up. But the trawler was approaching, and therein lay danger. Still, she managed to save seven, and was proceeding with the rescue of 10 those hanging on all around, when, since discretion is the better part of valor, she found it expedient to dive. She took them all; those inside and those out

"E-31 spent several hours on the bottom. Later she emerged again, and 10 it is doubtful (since it is not chronicled) which was the more surprised-E-31 or the big four-funneled German cruiser within 50 yards or so of which she found herself. But she was the wrong way on for loosing a torpedo and too close while the cruiser had to slew round before she could ram. Still, she had all the advantage over too; but E-31 was wary, saw the danger, and dived. Disappeared at an angle downward of something over 45 degrees. As her length was about 60 feet more than the depth of the water it was a maneuver attended by some risk. But this risk saved her

"Just as she dived the cruiser fired. She couldn't have missed if she'd tried; yet she did. The shot carried away all the outrigging of poor E-31, and she plunged to the bottom. You can't blame the Germans for thinking she was done, and for issuing an official report to that purpose, for if she had been hit she could not have 'plunged' quicker; her own men didn't know what had happened, though they knew something had. "Again E-31 lay on the bottom. Some hours later she came up and the damage was inspected. The shot had missed her by one inch-no more. She could tell by what was left of her outrigging and marks elsewhere. The angle at which she had dived had been her salvation,"
