

IVAN OLSON'S BOOTS BEAT BROOKLYN TEAM IN FIFTH WORLD GAME

Former Portlander Is "Goat" of Series; Gardner Is the Hero of Big Clash.

E. SHORE WINS TWO GAMES

Long Armed Boston Right-hander Is Always Master of Dodgers and Pitches Red Sox to Victory.

By Frank G. Menke.

Boston, Oct. 12. — (I. N. S.) — Ivan Olson made a double-barreled error on one play in third inning of yesterday afternoon's game and right then and there was written the word "Finis" on the world's series entertainment of 1916.

That brace of fozzles by the Dodger shortstop put the Red Sox into the lead and never afterward were they headed. Olson's bobbie enabled the Sox to win the fifth and deciding game in the battle for the diamond championship for the world, and permitted Boston to retain unblemished its record of never having lost in a combat for the first honors in baseball.

The thirteenth duel for the title is now history, but it isn't the kind the Brooklynites will read with any emotion of joy or pride.

Dodgers Were Outclassed.

The story of those five games shows, on the other hand, that the Dodgers were outclassed, that they met a team better in every department of play than their own. The inevitable happened.

Practically in every pinch the Dodgers flinched. In every crisis they played their worst baseball. Time and again during those five games a timely hit might have won for them, just as often a bit of airtight work afield might have saved the game. But, always, except during the third game, which they won, the Dodgers' sluggers were impotent in moments when it was necessary to produce a safety, their infield insisted upon "cracking" just at those moments when a fozzie meant the loss of a game to them.

Sox Never Rattled.

The Sox romped through to victory because they played far beyond the game of the Dodgers. They performed with machine-like regularity. They never became rattled, never nervous, never afraid of the outcome as did their foes. They just went along with one idea fixed coolly and calmly in their minds—to win. And they won without any real effort.

The Dodgers emerged from the series with a lone victory to their credit. Many there are who feel that it was something in the nature of a gift. Carl Mays was permitted to finger on the Red Sox mound in that game long after it was apparent to most observers that he was losing his hold on things.

Honors to Gardner.

Every world's series has its hero and the laurel wreath of 1916 properly belongs upon the dome of Larry Gardner, third sacker for the Sox. He covers acres of ground around his station, and his brilliant work in the field choked off several Dodger rallies.

His home run drive in the third game was a terrific clout, while his swat in the fourth broke the hearts of the Dodgers and clinched the game for his team.

Hi Myers played the best ball for the men of Brooklyn. He, too, achieved a homer and made several spectacular catches, but his greatest feat was in that second battle which went 14 innings. In the ninth with the speedy Janvri on third and one out, his great throw to the plate, following the snarling of Hoblitzel's liner, nipped Janvri by several feet and staved off defeat for five more rounds. It was one of the most perfect throws ever made on a ball field.

Dodgers Couldn't Hit.

The story of the final contest that was played yesterday afternoon before a record crowd reads much the same as the other Red Sox victories. It tells of the inability of the Dodgers to wallop when wallopers meant tallies, of fissures appearing in their defensive work just at the moment when it spelled ruin to them. It recounts, too, how the Sox kept witted, took advantage of every opportunity and transformed it into a run.

The job of pushing the Dodgers into oblivion as far as world's honors are concerned was delegated to Ernie Shore, the long and lean right-hander. And right nobly did he perform. He yielded only three hits during the entire game and not a clean belt was made off his shoos until the seventh, when Mowrey slipped one into left field. The preceding inning Chief Meyers made the first Dodger safety, a fluky one, by bounding the ball too high for Shore to pull down in.

time to get his man. The final Dodger swat was exuded in the ninth by Stengel.

Robins Take Lead.

The Dodgers jumped into the lead in the second when Cutshaw walked, was sacrificed to second, went to third on an out, and scored on a passed ball by Cady. But their supremacy was short lived. In the Sox half of the same inning Lewis lammed a smashing drive to left. It was too far in for Wheat to catch on the fly. So he elected to take it on the first bound and hold Lewis to a single.

Right there the famous "Boston luck" made itself conspicuous. The ball took a freak bound just as Wheat was set for it and leaped far over his head, rolling to the fence while Lewis ran to third, scoring a minute later on Gardner's sacrifice fly.

Here Comes the Swede.

—It was in the third that Olson put the blood-bloode upon the Dodgers' hopes and caused the Red Sox band to boom forth with the strains of "Perfect Day." It was right there that Olson presented the game to the Sox by making two errors on one play, a baseball freak. Cady, the first man up, singled. Shore went out on a foul trying to sacrifice. Hooper got a base on balls and then came Janvri.

He bounded one to Guion. The Dodger shortstop fumbled it in trying to pick it up, ruining his chance of throwing out Janvri at first. That was error No. 1. Then he became so excited that he threw the ball to Cutshaw at second hoping to force out Hooper, although Hooper already had arrived at the station. The throw went wild and before it was recovered Cady had crossed the plate. Hooper was on third and Janvri on second.

The scoring in that session ended when Shorten sent home Hooper with a single.

The final run of the world's series of 1916 was made by Hooper, the nemesis of the Dodgers. In the fourth inning, Hooper singled and Janvri immediately followed with a long double to left center which sent 'Andsome' Arty home. A batter made Janvri's two bagger possible. Wheat could have made the catch, but Myers ran into his territory and when none of the Dodgers yielded, Myers kept on and could not quite reach the drive, while Wheat kept out of the way.

Jeff Pfeffer pitched a fair game for the Dodgers and nothing more. The Sox showed no fear of his speed and his curves. They stepped right into them and banged them. Unfortunately for Pfeffer they acquired their

BRONSON MEETS SULLIVAN OVER RIVER TONIGHT

Main Eventers Will Box to a Decision in Rose City Gymnasium.

The Imperial Athletic club will stage its first smoker of the season tonight in the Rose City gymnasium at 8:30 o'clock. Muff Bronson and Frankie Sullivan being billed to clash in the main event. This bout will be for a decision, and both boys are confident of winning. Sullivan finished his training yesterday, boxing several fast rounds with Joe Benjamin. Bronson took his final workout this morning.

Billy Nelson, the Spokane lightweight, will meet Sailor McInnis in the semi-windup, and it is likely that these two boys will put up a great battle, as they are of the same-bang type of boxer. Walter Knowlton and Tommy Clark, who always give the fans a run for their money, will meet again, and Clark is hopeful of evening up matters tonight. Knowlton being awarded a decision at their last meeting. Eddie West, who hails from Denver, Colo., will be the opponent of Able Gordon, who will make his farewell appearance tonight. West is said to be a good boxer, but the little Hebrew is confident of beating him. Able leaves soon for Philadelphia to take on the crack eastern flyweights. The other bouts on the card are: Ad Maki vs. Carl Martin and Neil Zimmerman vs. Joe Burns. Jack King will referee the main event and Roy Kendall will officiate in the preliminaries.

Washington Squad Looking Better Now

University of Washington, Oct. 12.—Football prospects are looking brighter since the men returned from the National Guard camp at American Lake. For the first time this year Doble had his full team together Tuesday. The men getting back from the army mobilization camp are in exceptionally good shape and should be a big factor in the making of a good team. With the first game only a week away they will have to get in a lot of practice to perfect their team work. The only chance they will have before the game with Whitman will be in the game tomorrow with the Navy yards. Doble has resurrected the "ghost ball" and the men are being worked every night until long after dark. He is having a lot of trouble with the back field at present and it will be this department that will be the weak spot this year. His line is working fine and will be as good as in former years. In the backfield the only dependable men on hand are Noble and Gardner. Of these Noble is the only one who has played enough to earn a letter. Gardner was a second string man last year and has not had any too much experience. "Hap" Miller's freshman variety is rounding into good form for the first game of the season, which comes Saturday with Broadway high school. There are about 40 men trying out for the team and when the season finally starts Washington will have one of the best first year elevens that ever represented the school.
