GAMES FOR HOLIDAY

PARTIES If all the guests know "Musical Night" is a good game and provides plenty of fun, coupled with an opportunity to make a noise, which, for some reason or another, seems to be the acme of delight for so many. In this game half the company are blindfolded and put sitting down with a vacant chair beside each one. At a given signal the piano starts some familiar tune and immediately the rest run to the unoccupied seats and start singing, continuing until the music stops, when the blind men must guess who is the neighboring musician.

Should the name be given correctly they change places. Should the guesses fail he or she must remain blindfolded, and the contestant who scores the most successes in either capacity wins.

Another game that afforded us much fun in our childhood was entitled "Mrs. McGee Is Dead." The players sit in a circle and one begins with a very sad face to announce "Mrs. McGee is dead." Immediately the neighbor to the left asked, "How did she die?" and the rest replied, "With one finger up, just like this!" making the action to suit the words. The query and response went right round the circle until the first replied, "With one finger up, just like this!" making the action to suit the words.

When the first was reached again the same statement and question were asked again, but the answer changed to "With one finger up and one blind eye," closing the eye and holding the lid down with the raised finger, the third again asked the question, and the repetition of the answer came "With one finger up and one blind eye and her mouth all awry," and this time the players twisted their faces as absurdly as possible.

Probably by this time there was considerable difficulty in keeping from laughing, as all the players were looking absolutely absurd. However, at the crowning effort was required at the last repetition, when the description of the lamented lady's demise was with one finger up and one blind eye and her mouth all awry, shivering and shaking just like I," and all the players looked as idiotic as possible, shaking from head to foot as though they had paid.

Of course, the object in this game was to keep serious, for every one who laughed or forgot to act the part when giving the description was fined a forfeit or else marked. The winner naturally being the contestant who was quite perfect, or at least had the fewest bad marks to his credit.

CHRISTMAS CAKE Three-quarter each seeded and sultana, 1/2 pound each citron, orange and lemon peel; 1/2 pound each candied gages, apricots and pineapple; flour all with 1/4 pound flour. Beat to a cream 1/2 pound sweet butter and 1/2 pound pulverized sugar, beat 8 eggs (without separating) until light, sift 1/2 pound flour, add a little of the egg to butter and sugar, and then a little flour, and so continue until whole is smooth; 1 nutmeg, 1/4 teaspoonful mace, 1/2 teaspoonful cinnamon, 1/2 teaspoonful cloves, 1 egg orange juice, 1 egg grape juice, then floured fruit, mixing well. Bake in slow oven four hours.

FISH LOAF Have bone and skin removed from haddock. Put three slices of bread on the bottom of bread pan. On this put a layer of bread or cracker dressing, then fish and dressing until all is used. Put pork over top. Bake one half hour 'n hot oven. Turn out and serve with or without tomato sauce.

SETTING THE CHRISTMAS TABLE Make a center of a tiny Christmas tree, either real or artificial, and bank it with red berries and Christmas greens so the centerpiece is covered. Decorate the tree with small ornaments, tinsel and red candles (the candles will light the table). Hang red ribbons or narrow strips of tissue paper from the tree in this way with small gifts—"Joshes"—a little automobile for the motorist, a rolling-pin for the housewife, and so on. For place cards, write appropriate alliterations or short verses to go with each top, with the name of the guest for whom it is meant at the top of the card. This always makes fun.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES
Officers From All Parts of the State Will Confer December 31.
Conference of Officers Called.—By the authority of Governor Withycombe, commander in chief of the Oregon National Guard, an order issued by Major W. W. Wilson, acting adjutant general, a conference of the commissioned officers and staff of the O. N. G. will be held on Sunday, December 31, at the Armory in this city. Papers will be read by Lieutenant Colonel U. G. McAlexander, U. S. A., and Major Frederick W. Pfister, U. S. A., and the questions arising from the new national defense law will be considered. The gathering will include all branches of the service except those in the active service of the United States. A conference of this nature is called every year, and is authorized by law.

Qualified for Ratings.—Eight company coast artillery, O. N. G., sent six men to qualify for higher ratings at the annual examinations on November 8 and 9. Five of them qualified, as follows: Sergeant Fred H. Reese, Privates Fred C. Norby, Charles E. Willison and James Frankland qualified as observers. Private Willison also qualified as a plottor. The studies followed them to qualify for this rank are mathematical and are good training for any young man. They are entitled to extra pay when on duty and to wear suitable insignia on their sleeves. Plottors and observers are essential in the efficient management of the big coast defense guns.

Service Medals Due.—Captain Frank W. Wright, Lieutenant V. N. Walton and Corporal Benjamin Nivell will shortly receive five year service medals for duty performed in that time continuously in the Eighth company, C. A. C.

Cadet's Doing Well.—The C. A. C. cadets under command of Corporal Ben H. Parkinson of Eighth company, C. A. C., have been supplied with uniforms by order of W. W. Wilson, acting adjutant general. Two of them this week enlisted in Eighth company, Logan Jones and Charles Butler. The boys are anxious to qualify themselves. Captain Wright has suggested to some of the men in the Eighth company that they take the cadets for an example.

and helps to get things started. For instance, for an automobilist, Mr. Reed:

There was a young fellow named Reed; He was a rooster, indeed!
He always drove fast
All a speed on his road.
And now of some ball he's in need.

DAME FASHION'S NOTES

The frock of blue can be enriched with embroidery in ruby red. Straps of fur appear on the corsages of some evening gowns. Pockets in novel shapes are frequently placed at the hip line. Much attention will be paid to buckles on the evening slippers. Checked silks are favorite materials for youthful frocks.

Cloth-covered link chains are charmingly used for belts. Slip-over and peplum waists are worn with short suit coats.

TOMORROW'S MEETINGS
10 A. M.—WOMEN'S COOPERATIVE LEAGUE at First Presbyterian church to finish plans and sewing for Baby Home Christmas.
10:30 A. M.—All day meeting of MULTNOMAH COUNTY W. C. U. at Waverley Heights Congregational church. Take Richmond car to Thirty-third street. Speakers, Mrs. M. L. Hidden, Mrs. L. F. Addition, Mrs. Stella Wilson and Mrs. H. B. Greenman.
2:30 P. M.—DAUGHTERS OF CONFEDERACY with Mrs. A. G. Opp, 511 East Ash street.
3:15 P. M.—STEPHENS PARENT-TEACHER ASSOCIATION, Speaker L. L. Summers.

COURAGE
What we can do is so little, our courage to do it so much. Courage is, in fact, our life—to tell ourselves the truth, and to do it.—Maurice Hewlett.

Sidelights at Public Market

Humor in Cabbages and Mackerel

By Ella McMunn.
This morning I went through six blocks of wonderful smells—the public market and from the first stall where a man was bathing some radishes clear down the line to where a box of clams were reaching out of their shells for adventure and yet withdrawing hastily at the slightest prospect of fulfillment. I minced along and marveled. The funniest thing I saw was what appeared to be a bath sponge lying alongside of some meat, and I wondered if times really were so hard that people ate those because they made such a lastling diet. But before the clerk answered me he asked where I came from, and when I said "near Salem," he smiled and told me what everything else was in the store, and that the sponge was a cow's stomach. But I'd like to know the joke about Salem, for just now I can't think of much about it except that you can go to bed there at 7 o'clock and sleep all night and the next day if you want to, and you don't have to shut your window to keep the noise out, or put a pillow over your ear to shut out the hiss of the steam pipes and your bed doesn't feel like a slab at the undertaker's.

Guaranteed Eggs There.
At the next place I saw what looked like a bowl of Gruss Au Tepilz rose buds, but when a man stabbed one of them with his pocket knife and the blood rushed out I had to look quickly at some calm, cool turkeys and some guaranteed eggs that had the hen's name or something on the shell.
A "Baby Beef" sign drew a lot of people and so did the baby beef's father and mother hanging up by their heels with their heads and hides off and a lot of holly wreaths on them and some flowers carved on their sides. If only there had been some music it would have been almost as nice as a funeral. Then there were a lot of little rabbits with blood on their heads where they had been clubbed to death to save bullets. Their bowels were gone but they still had fleas. Although when I left there were not so many on the rabbits—no, certainly not on the rabbits.
One man urgently requested me to buy a dead chicken, and when I had exhausted all my arguments against it, it occurred to me to inquire what was the cause of the chicken's death, and it took me 20 minutes to explain to him that having noted no marks of violence upon the fowl I wondered how he had caused it to pass away and still look so life-like, without any feathers and with a bunch of parsley under one wing like a bride's "arm bouquet." I think I made peace, anyway he apologized when he saw that the wet mackerel he waved had slipped out of his hands and landed upon my shoe.

At one place they had wooden pincers to handle the smelliest of the fish but a woman wanted to poke them with her fingers so she had to wipe her hands on the clerk's apron, but even then she needed a finger bowl, lacking which she kept thrusting her fingers into the hearts of the moist lettuce leaves.

They Tell a Story.
But all of the talk down there wasn't about "cabbages and kings," for two men, sent unwillingly to market by their wives, were talking about some prominent society people of the North End and if anybody didn't know where that was, they had only to stop and look at some pumpkins or hominy or something near by, for the man who was hearing the story was very deaf, and the man telling it was not and had good lungs and both were lawyers. Throughout the killing recital they reached down into a keg of kraut and let vinegar drip over their chins while they talked, and the story must have been a long one, for as I looked back I could see ever so many people buying kraut and hominy and cabbages at that stall.

Measure Makes Food Cornering a Felony
Washington, Dec. 21.—(U. P.)—A bill providing for imprisonment of those found guilty of cornering foodstuffs was offered by Senator Poin-dexter yesterday. A penitentiary sentence of not less than six months nor more than three years was provided in the bill.

Bed Time Tales

BY CLARA INGRAM JUDSON

Winter Trouble.
EARLY WINTER IS SUCH a beautiful time of the year that one would think it was a happy time for everyone—man or beast. The trees, as they gradually shed their golden dresses and make ready for the winter's rest look happy; the skies are rosy and clear and the fields look smiling and restful after their summer's work. All the little woodpeckers have their chipboards filled for the winter-time and are ready for play when the sun shines warm. It doesn't sound like a time of trouble does it? And it wouldn't be a time of trouble either, if only folks understood about the woods' creatures and cared for them as they should be cared for; indeed it wouldn't be!

But unfortunately all folks don't understand, and so the beautiful autumn-time brings trouble for our friends in the woods.
Foxy Squirrel knew that trouble was likely to come, because he remembered the happenings of last year; Tippy Cottontail knew that his carefree days wouldn't last all winter because he, too, remembered. But the woods folk never worry about trouble until it really comes, and even then they do not really worry, they only do all they can to protect themselves from danger. And really, when you never worry about trouble till it comes, you save yourself a lot—try it and see if you don't!

So, even though he knew that danger might come any day, Foxy had played as happily as could be and hadn't worried a mite. But one morning, when the sun shone so brightly that all the world should have been happy and at peace, he heard the sound that told him danger was near. Of course, you know what he heard—he heard the sound of a gun! The roar rumbled through the bare branches of the trees and echoed clear through Shadow Woods.

He went up the tree on the side away from the noise of the gun. He had better do, no sir! He just scampered up the tree and into his nest as fast as ever he could go, that's what he did. And I'll tell you how he went; he went up the tree on the side away from the noise of the gun—the side away. Maybe you have noticed that yourself; if a squirrel is afraid of you, he will run up his tree on the side away from where you are standing. If he runs up on the side nearest you, he is telling you as plainly as if he spoke, that he is your friend and that he is afraid of you no longer.

After Foxy reached the shelter of his nest, he began to plan how he could help his friend Tippy Cottontail, for he knew that the sun meant trouble for Tippy more than for anyone else. "I must think of a way to help Tippy, I must!" he thought.

UNIVERSITY STUDENT BODY TO ISSUE BONDS FOR ATHLETIC FIELD

Eighteen Thousand Dollars to Be Spent at State Institution to Improve Sports.

University of Oregon, Eugene, Or., Dec. 21.—By a vote of 182 to 34, the university student body voted yesterday to authorize the issuance of $10,000 worth of bonds for the construction of a new athletic field. To this sum will be added a surplus of about $8000, which it is expected will be in the regular treasury at the close of the present college year, and the receipts which will be secured from the payment of the student body tax next fall, making in all close to $18,000.

The bonds will be repaid by the receipts from the new grandstand and bankers have assured Graduate Manager Tiffany that there will be no difficulty in finding buyers for the full amount of the bond issue. The new field will be built on property owned by the university and will be designed to give a dry playing surface throughout the season. The grandstand will seat 4000 and bleachers will bring the capacity to about 10,000.
