Nearly everyone has been humiliated by his slowness of wit. A month, or a week, or a day after a heated couversation with the boss, the grocery boy or the city editor, the thing that should have been said has come to mind with startling vividness.

lawyers. Some legislators are innocently graft? supporting the scuttle program. Here is a fact for them to remember:

During the year 1915, the total premiums paid casualty companies In the United States for workmen's compensation insurance was $66,-795,785. The total losses paid by the companies were $30,759,785. That is to say, for the country as a whole the amount that went to workers, the workers' lawyers and the workers' widows and orphans was only 46.1 per cent of the sum contributed by employers for workmen's compensation.

In Oregon, practically all the money contributed for compensation insurance under the compensation act, went direct to workers and their families.

The fight on the compensation act is a fight on the workers and their families. The people of Oregon decided between the casualty companies and the workers and their dependents in a referendum of the compensation law in 1913. In that poll the workers carried every county in the state, some of the counties by a vote of four to one. The best thing the legislature can do is to leave the compensation law alone, except in such minor changes as are proposed by the friends of the system.

The American people now know upon the belligerents. He foresaw that which has come to pass-the new submarine warfare, and tried to bring about world peace to save peace for America.

Its mission does not end with the presentation of the day's news, but it goes further in supplying its readers with sundry information on a variety of subjects of especial interest.

The needs of the home are given wide consideration and helpful suggestions concerning the conduct of the household are many.

Matron and maid find departments devoted to dress, needlework and other pertinent subjects of intimate appeal.

The business man is offered adequate news and review of markets, finance and allied interests. News of the marine and automobile world is satisfactorily presented.

The field of recreation and entertainment is recognized in divers ways-in the competent sports pages, in the dramatic news and reviews and in the review of social activities.

The serious endeavor of women's clubs, the musical folk, etc., is carefully set forth.

Ample material for reflection and consideration is offered on the editorial page.

The presentation of current news events, in picture and text, satisfies the universal demand for general information.

Good short fiction and the comic section provide entertainment and amusement for the idle hour.
