get all through the United States during the week was not unexpected in view of foreign conditions. The early weakness became erratic when dinical matter relations all can make a guess.

If the United States prohibits the importation of cereals to foreign countries as some believe will be done as a result of latest foreign developments, then there is likely to be a lower price range. If, on the other hand, the action of Germany's submarine war makes it impossible for Europe to secure its needs in this country a similar.

Ageing is absolutely necessary in securing the best quality of apples. Only confusion, a glutted market and likely ruinous values could possibly result from the hasty marketing of the produce. It is different with the marketing of oranges. This fruit is ready for market the moment it is gathered from the trees. It needs no ageing.

The matter of selecting a mode of apple sales is a very serious problem to the Pacific northwest at this time. The solution means either life or death to the industry.
