DEFENSE'S ATTORNEYS CHARGE A 'FRAME-UP' IN CADWALLADER CASE

Elton Watkins Says Alienation Accusation Against Cameron Is Blackmail.

HUSBAND HOTLY SCORED

Counsel Says Evidence Lacking That Extreme Intimacy Existed Between Defendant and Wife.

That Charles L. Cadwallader, "framed up" his $50,000 suit against James K. Cameron, wealthy timberman, for alienation of the affections of his now divorced wife, Mrs. Dorothy Cadwallader was openly charged by Cameron's attorneys, Elton Watkins and John McCourt in Circuit Judge Davis' court this morning. "The case has an element of blackmail in it. This man committed perjury when he took the witness stand," declared Watkins who opened the argument for the defense after the last testimony, including that of Cameron had been heard.

Particularly did Mr. Watkins score Cadwallader for alleging in his complaint that Cameron and Mrs. Cadwallader's relations had reached the extreme of intimacy and then failing to introduce any word of evidence, either of his own or of any witness for him, to substantiate the charge.

Denial Is Sweeping.

Cameron's testimony comprised a sweeping denial of all the charges against him by Cadwallader. He denied having ever kissed Mrs. Cadwallader, of having sat upon her lap, of having given her candy in the box that was offered in evidence, or of ever treating her in any way unbecoming an employer. Mrs. Cadwallader is Cameron's stenographer. He met the insinuation that Mrs. Cadwallader's frequent increases in pay by saying that when he dismissed a bookkeeper, Mrs. Cadwallader undertook the work at an increase from $85 to $110 a month, and that later, when Cadwallader, who had been employed at $75 a month, to do some clerical work for Cameron, had proven himself inefficient, Mrs. Cadwallader also took over her husband's work for an increase to $135 a month.

On a trip to Chanticleer Inn, said Cameron, Cadwallader was a member of the party. Mrs. Cameron was with him on the occasion of one trip to the beach where Mrs. Cadwallader happened to be, and on another occasion several women comprised a beach party of which Mrs. Cadwallader was a member.

Woman Friend Registered.

Cameron denied that he had registered for Mrs. Cadwallader at the Cornelius hotel during the silver thaw last February, and Mrs. Cadwallader asserted on the stand that her name had been signed on the register by Alice Tooley, with whom she had slept that night. Mrs. Cadwallader said that she had not come to work that day, but had started down town in response to a call from Miss Tooley, was stranded because of the storm at Powell Valley road and East Twenty-sixth street, and Cameron then came for her in a Packard service car which had but one seat, so to make room for the driver she found it necessary to sit on his lap during the trip down town. Hotel clerks had previously testified that Cameron had not called on Mrs. Cadwallader at the hotel, but that he had paid her hotel bills upon occasions when storm kept her from going home.

Husband Gave Candy.

Miss Verne Clausen, a nurse of the National Hospital association and a former employe of Cameron, testified that Cadwallader had given his wife the candy that had been in the box brought into court. Mrs. Cadwallader said not only had her husband given her the candy but that he had boasted that he got it at wholesale. Miss Clauson also testified that the handwriting on the hotel register was not Cameron's. Stress was laid by the defense on the testimony given by "Billy" Braeger yesterday afternoon. Cadwallader on the stand admitted having received a note for $1000 from Jesse Troeh to satisfy his injury for alleged intimacy between his wife and Troeh, but added that he had not sought payment because he considered Cameron the worse offender.

Braeger said he met Cadwallader at lunch after he had secured the note from Troeh and that Cadwallader exhibited it. Braeger asked if Cadwallader was not afraid of blackmail, and the man answered that he was not because Troeh had broken up his home.

W. W. Dugan, for Cadwallader, opened the argument before the jury, Elton Watkins and John McCourt followed for Cameron, and it was expected that Henry S. Westbrook would close for Cadwallader immediately after the noon recess, and that the case would go to the jury early in the afternoon.

GOLDEN WEST HOTEL MANAGER AL GREEN TRIAL SET FOR TODAY

Police Raiding Place Found Quantity of Contraband Drinkables.

The trial of Al G. Green, manager of the Golden West hotel, which was raided by the police Monday afternoon, was set for 2 o'clock this afternoon by Municipal Judge Langguth. Green is charged with maintaining a nuisance, while C. R. Meins and O. D. Thomas, white, are charged with violating the prohibition law. All are held under $500 bail each.

The raid by the police Monday netted more than 80 quarts of liquor, including a keg full of sherry. The raid was uncontemplated, and was the result of an inadvertant liquor disclosure on the part of colored employes of the hotel.

Agents of the internal revenue department, looking from the windows of their offices in the customs house, across the street, saw O. D. Thomas carry two suitcases into the hotel. At the same time Meins, who is connected with the Advance Auto Touring Co., stopped in front of the hotel entrance.

City Detective Hill was summoned and Deputy Collectors Miles, Smith, McGill and Littell went across the street and arrested Meins and Thomas. A colored man had just left the hotel, carrying a suitcase that was later found to be filled with quart bottles of whiskey. Meins and Thomas were taken to headquarters and questioned. They were then charged with violating the prohibition law. In a few minutes ten police and detectives were at the hotel and the raid started. A systematic search of the place from basement to the fifth floor was begun and much liquor was found. Eight quarts of liquor were found in Green's room, while 39 quarts were found in the room occupied by John Lowe, a chauffeur.

Meins' new touring car, which he left in front of the hotel, was seized and is held by the police.

PORTLAND SUPREME AS JOBBING CENTER SAYS MR. STRAUSS

Speaker at Retailers' Convention Says City's Producing Area Gives Lead.

OTHER SPEECHES MADE

Creating New Business and Cooperation Are Advocated by Speakers at the Morning Session.

Portland's supremacy as a jobbing center was emphasized to the delegates attending the Oregon Retail Merchants association convention by Nathan Strauss, chairman of the bureau of trade and commerce of the Chamber of Commerce, and one of the principal speakers at this forenoon's session of the merchants' meeting.

Declaring that Portland is the commercial center of the Pacific northwest, Mr. Strauss sad that it is entitled to this position because of the producing territory contiguous to it. Even, on the basis of traffic rates, Portland remains the logical commercial center, and comparison of rates to Portland and to Puget sound points was made. Mr. Strauss also pointed out how Portland today excels in both production and manufacturing.

E. D. Timms of Timms, Cress & Co., speaking on the topic, "Creating New Business," gave many valuable suggestions to his hearers.

Reports Are Read.

The first hour of the morning session was taken up with brief reports of the year's work done by various merchants' associations of the state. In a discussion that followed the reports A. C. Marsters of Rosebug, vice president of the state association, spoke upon the need of greater cooperation between the rural merchant and the farmer and producer.

"Close cooperation with the rural producer," Mr. Marsters said, "will become the most effective measure and weapon against the mail order houses that can be devised. When the union of the merchant with the rural people's interests is wedded we will have no further trouble.

"There can be no danger of our making the invitation to the rural customer or producer too broad. We must convince them that our associations have no such a thing as secret meetings, and it must be impressed upon the farmer that we really want him to attend our meetings. We must convince him that his interests are our interests."

At 12:30 the delegates were guests of the Albers Brothers' Milling company at a luncheon, and this afternoon they are meeting the merchants and jobbers of the city.

Program for Tonight.

At 8 p. m., a meeting will be held at the Oregon building, at which the following addresses will be made: "Port of Astoria," B. F. Stone of S. Elmore & Co., Astoria; "Relation of the Consumer to the Retailer," Mrs. George McMath, president Oregon Congress of Mothers; "Failure Prevention," Bert M. Denison of Albers Bros. Milling company; "The Specialty Store," Leo Friede of the Greater Portland association. A general discussion on "New Developments in Meeting Mail Order Competition" will be led by F. L. Trullinger of Yamhill, Or.

At tomorrow morning's session W. D. B. Dodson, executive secretary of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, will speak on "Striking a Trial Balance on Oregon Conditions," and Marshal N. Dana on "Building Up Institutions That Count." The election of officers will also be held and the completion of the business of the convention. At noon the delegates will be the guests of the Pacific Coast Biscuit company at a luncheon, and the convention will close in a smoker and high jinks to be given at the Chamber of Commerce by the entertainment committee of the joint body of manufacturers and jobbers.

In a talk to Reed college students, Dr. Poling said: "Indifference in public affairs keeps step with indifference in private life. School for Aliens Visited by S. A. R.

Interested visitors Monday night at the naturalization school for foreigners held in the Shattuck school building were a number of Portland Sons of the American Revolution, headed by Winthrop Hammond.

As one of the country's leading patriotic societies the Sons of the American Revolution were invited to inspect the naturalization school by L. R. Alderman, superintendent of city schools, in order that they might see what is being accomplished in making good Americans out of aliens who are ambitious of becoming citizens.

David M. Mosessohn, principal, personally showed the visitors through the several classrooms, pointing out the remarkable progress being made by many of the pupils, who range in age from teens to past 50, in the use of the English language and in the study of American history and civics.

So interested were the Sons of the American Revolution in the school that an invitation has been extended to John Veatch, director of night schools, to address the entire Portland membership of the S. A. R. at the annual business meeting of the society, to be held at the University club at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon, Washington's birthday. Mr. Veatch will explain the workings of the school and show the need of such institutions in reducing the illiteracy among aliens. KISER'S COLLECTION OF ARTOGRAPHS OF SCENIC WEST ON VIEW

Beauties and Splendors of Northwest Shown in Collection of Wide Range.

With 137 artographs, which is a new name for colored photographs, belonging to the superb collection of Fred H. Kiser, now on free exhibition in the ball room at the Hotel Portland, visitors to the city are realizing that it isn't necessary to cross the water for scenery, and even the long time resident is finding new beauties and undreamed of splendor in "The rocks and rills, the woods and templed hills" of Oregon and the rest of the U. S. A. that lies in the Northwest.

The Lake Chelan region in Washington, with its snow crowned peaks, its rushing rivers and its placid lakes is there in all its wild beauty that only a camera can catch and only a Kiser can color; the sporting springs of Yellowstone park, its green glacial ice and its rainbow stratas of sandstone are there; but, greater than these are the Crater Lake pictures—Oregon's own pride—that number nearly half a hundred, but because an entire summer was spent by Mr. Kiser and his staff assistant, C. C. McKin, in that region, catching a sunset here, a sunrise there and a moonlight effect somewhere else, there is wonderful variety in the collection, and there is what is technically known as "atmosphere" in every picture.

From the catalogue you learn the name of the picture and where it was located, but when the artists themselves tell you about the blue water of this lake of mystery, Crater lake, near which no Indian ventures, you see it rolling up around the boat like an inverted sky, you see the chasms over which the boat passes, and which have no end save as they unite with "the waters under the earth," if such there be. You see the fish that thrive in the pure water 1000 feet below the brink of the crater, and which must be fed, because there is neither vegetable nor animal life there for them on which to feed, save as it is supplied by the government, and you resolve then and there to save your pennies and "do" that region when vacation comes, which is, of course, the primary object of the exhibition, to inspire alike the traveler and the chronic stay-at-homes with a desire to "See Oregon First."

The exhibition closes this evening at 10 o'clock.
