Appeals for Help For War Prisoners

W. H. Tinker of Y. M. C. A., Speaking to Reed College Students, Tells of Urgent Needs in European Prisons.

Appealing for food, clothing and supplies for the six million men in the prison camps of Europe, W. H. Tinker, member of the International Y. M. C. A., spoke yesterday at the morning chapel service at Reed college, picturing the horrors of prison life and the men's urgent need of help. He said many of the prisoners who had been there six months were without change of clothing during that time, and that their condition was pitiable.

He told of the various prison camps in which 2000 to 6000 men were herded behind barbed wire fences that had been electrified until there was little hope of escaping, or in the event that they did they were reached by the cannons or shot down upon reaching "No Man's Land" that lies just outside. Their breakfast, he said, consisted of one roll and a cup of coffee; their lunch a bowl of soup and a roll, and their dinner some more soup and a roll—rations that could not long keep life in the body of a strong man, and certainly could not assuage the pangs of hunger.

Habeas Corpus Writ For Chinese Women

Alleged Lewd Characters, They Have Been Ordered Deported, and Move Started to Forestall Action.

Habeas corpus proceedings were started in the United States district court Monday by W. A. Johnson and Albert Ridgway to prevent the deportation of two Chinese women, Lee Kee and Chin Toy.

According to evidence brought out, the women came to this country, one in 1911, and the other in 1914, and were both married by circuit judges. Both went to Boise, where they were arrested in October, 1915, but discharged. Later, after a federal white slave charge failed to detain them, they were taken before Immigration Inspector Topping of Boise, who ordered their deportation on the grounds of violation of the immigration laws.

Assistant United States Attorney John Beckman is representing the government and will be given 15 days to prepare an answer.

RUBY ANNIVERSARY OF THE HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY IS CELEBRATED

Portland Baptist Women Honor Anniversary With Program and Luncheon.

The ruby or fortieth anniversary of the American Women's Baptist Home Missionary society, which is being celebrated throughout the country, was elaborately celebrated Tuesday by the Portland women of that organization. Luncheon was served to 225 women at Hotel Multnomah at 12:30, followed by an interesting program, and in the evening there was a mass meeting at the White Temple.

The honor guests at the luncheon were Mrs. T. S. Tompkins, third vice-president of the organization who came up from Pasadena to be present at the celebration, and Miss Anna Nelson, missionary among the Hopi Indians of Arizona. Miss Nelson gave an interesting address, her subject being "The Jewels Gathered in Hopiland," in which she told of her work along religious and hygienic lines.

Mrs. Tompkins made a plea for greater consecration on the part of the women, declaring that gifts of money accomplished little unless accompanied by the devotion and love of the giver.

Mrs. O. P. M. Jamison, state director for the National society in Oregon, was chairman of the arrangements and presided with grace and tact as toastmistress. The tables were beautifully decorated in ruby colored carnations and ruby tulle. Mrs. James Failing, vice-president of the Columbia river district of the Foreign Missionary society, spoke briefly of that organization. Mrs. D. C. Latourette, of Oregon City, secretary of the district, also spoke. "The Pearl of Great Price" was the subject of Mrs. A. M. Petty's address. The achievements of the 40 years of organization were recalled by Miss Carrie O. Millspaugh. Mrs. C. A Wooddy spoke "Ruby Chips," designating each woman interested in the work as a chip of the great ruby.

Bed Time Tales

BY CLARA INGRAM JUDSON

The Little Toy Duck.

ONCE upon a time there was a little toy duck who lived in a Japanese garden. Not a really truly Japanese garden, of course; just a little pretend one—the kind you make in a dish, out of horseradish roots.

But the little toy duck was a real Japanese toy—made in Japan and brought over to Chicago in a big ocean boat. There it was seen and purchased by a little girl and put in her brand new horseradish Japanese garden.

"Now," said the little girl, "you're not a toy any more; you're a really, truly duck, and you live in this really, truly garden."

So at once the little toy duck shed all his toy feelings and they slipped down into the water and were drowned—and the little toy duck felt himself to be a really true duck who lived in a Japanese garden.

He had a very jolly time there, too, though sometimes he got just a bit lonesome, for all the company he had was the little toy swan over on the next horseradish island!

Every day he would watch and listen—see the people come and go in the big living room—hear their talk about the many strange happenings in their lives.

"I wish I could talk," he thought to himself. "I believe it is much more sociable to talk than to just sit and listen."

Then he pondered and listened another whole day.

And the people came and went and finally night arrived—the lights in the house shone a while, then went out.

The night time was the little duck's favorite time, for then the moonbeams flickered in through the window pane, danced onto the water in the horseradish Japanese garden and played games with the tiny toy duck.

"Oh, if I could only talk now," thought the duck wistfully, "what a jolly time I would have playing with the moonbeams."

The top duck flapped his wings and swam to the nearest horseradish island.

"Eh?" asked a moonbeam just then. "What is that you want to do?"

The duck was so frightened he nearly slid into the water. "I wonder if he was talking to me," he thought.

"Of course, I am talking to you," answered the moonbeam, just as plainly as if the duck had spoken aloud; "if you want to talk—just talk—that's the way to do things! Anybody can do anything, if they only try!"

The little duck swallowed the big lump of fright (and celluloid) in his throat and began to talk!

"Yes," he said, "ask me, I know, anybody can do anything if they try."

And he flapped his wings, slid into the moonlit water and swan over to the nearest horseradish island.

City Officials of Gary Are Arrested

Mayor and Several Others Under Indictment for Alleged Violation of Federal Election Laws Out on Bond.

Gary, Ind., Feb. 21.—(U. P.)—Mayor R. O. Johnson, Chief of Police W. A. Forbis, Howard Hay, chairman of the city central committee of the Republican party, and C. M. Remnollett, city sealer of weights and measures, were arrested here yesterday charged with violation of the federal election laws.

All the men arrested are Republicans. Remnollett and Forbis are appointees of Mayor Johnson. They were released on bonds of $5000 each.

The arrests were made by United States Marshal Mark Storen of Indianapolis. Immediately after taking the Gary officials into custody the federal officers left for other towns in Lake county where other arrests will be made. They refused to state how many or the names of the politicians and officials that they had warrants for.

Package Under Coat Ice Cream, Not Booze

Personal Search for Liquor Causes So Much Trouble in Marshfield That District Attorney Interferes.

Marshfield, Or., Feb. 21. — District Attorney John F. Hall gives an interesting opinion regarding the right of officers to search persons on the streets to ascertain if they are carrying liquor. Four such searches have been made by the city police and in three cases it proved that the persons carried no liquor.

City Marshal Carter chased one man whom he believed to be carrying liquor and, searching him, found he was hurrying to a church social with a brick of ice cream.

Personal search has created much indignation.

The district attorney says if an officer searches a person and finds liquor he would have fair protection of his position, but that it is plain that if a person were searched against his will and without result such person would have recourse against the officer.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING MEASURES TO FAIL OF PASSAGE

Senator Chamberlain Admits Hope Gone at Present but Plans for Next Session.

Washington, Feb. 21.—(U. P.)—Universal military training legislation will fail of passage at the present session of congress, Senator Chamberlain, father of the measure now before congress, admitted today.

"I have no hope whatever," Chamberlain said to the United Press, "of getting action on my bill. However, I shall again ask my committee to add it on the pending military appropriation bill."

As a single objection on the senate floor, however, would defeat this attempt, and as strong opposition exists in the house, Senator Chamberlain considers his effort will be hopeless.

A great drive, however, will be started, he said, early in the next session, to put the measure through.

Despite the hopeless blockade of such legislation, the army general staff has announced it would send to congress its detailed plans for putting the system into operation.

Food Control Bodies Advocated

New York Feb. 21.—(U. P.)—Federal and state food control commissions to regulate the supply and distribution of food, will be necessary to prevent food riots from spreading throughout the country, Commissioner of Weights and Measures Joseph Hartigan declared yesterday after he received the report of rioting in front of the city hall here.

"These commissions should take extraordinary measures," said Commissioner Hartigan. "They should learn the per capita consumption of food, the amount of food products and provisions produced, and if necessary order embargoes on the shipment of food from one state to another or out of the country.

"They should see that food is not held away from the cities, where it is most needed, and also should keep it out of the storage houses while people are starving."
