STEAMER O. M. CLARK BECOMES OBJECT OF SUSPICION OF CONSUL

American Vessel Has Little War Experience Off Bluefields, Nicaragua.

TAKEN FOR GERMAN CRAFT

Former Second Mate Returns With Many Stories, Including That of the Monster Shark.

The American steamer O. M. Clark, well known in the harbor, had a little war experience all her own, according to J. A. Johnson, formerly her second mate, who has returned from New Orleans. While engaged in handling logs from Bluefields, Nicaragua, to New Orleans, the O. M. Clark had occasion to take a return cargo to Colon from New Orleans. 'At the canal zone the vessel took on 57 drums of gasoline day. The vessel ran aground Thursand a quantity of supplies for the day morning and still is fast. No Bluefields logging camps, from which other particulars were told in the dis- Kilner and the craft was hauling.

Arriving at Bluefields, it was first bad weather, then a broken down logging engine and one thing after another that prevented the craft from discharging her cargo. To the easily aroused English consul at that point, the actions of the steamer looked suspicious.

"Ha, a German submerine base," thought he, and forthwith got into action. For the next two weeks the officers of the ship were dogged by mysterious detectives wherever they went. A patrol boat lay alongside the craft, or near her, during the night, and men Richard Bagot will take over comwatched her continuously during day-

Higgins and others of the Clark's took the City of Pueblo to New York other fellow's expense when the supplies were unloaded onto lighters and taken into the logging camps.

The Clark gained a new reputation at the canal zone. Owing to changes in orders she passed through the Panama canal three times in six days-a record so far.

Johnson also tells of a monster shark caught on a hook and line off Bluefields. The shark opened and shut its jaws even after the head had been severed from the rest of the body. And-when dead, of course-the mouth was so big that a man could place his head and shoulders inside of

The Panama canal is in fine shape now, according to Johnson. The hills on either side of Gaillard, formerly Culebra cut, are being mined down, so that the bottom pressure, which ormerly caused the canal to shoal, is being done away with. The govern-ment system there is a miracle of smoothness and efficiency, he de Johnson also decries the lack of

PREMIER ADMITS DIVERS' BLOWS ARE BEING FELT

Unless the submarine menace is removed, declared the premier, disaster will overtake the allies. He warned that prompt and ruthless measures must be taken. German submarines must be hunted from the seas before the allies can hope for victory, he said The premier announced drastic reductions in importations, chiefly in meats and fruits. The galleries were crowded for the special meeting of commons, and gusts of cheers greeted the words of the premier. Mr. Lloyd George did not try to hide the dangers. He said that the fool stores on hand now are the lowest in the history of the nation,

This step was taken to encourage persons to enter that kind of work.

The premier made no effort to minimize the seriousness of the food shortage which confronts England as a result of the German submarine war-He said that the stock of food on hand now is the lowest on record.
"It was inevitable that the German submarine war would injure the empire's trade," said Mr. Lloyd George. "We must meet it in an effective way.
