With the presentation of a play, "The Great Trail," at St. David's church Thursday evening, the twenty-ninth annual convention of Episcopal churches of Oregon closed a three day session.

The play, allegorical in character, dealt with the coming of the Gospel to the red man, the first part showing him in his life of savagery, and the latter part the softening effects of the gentle Nazarene's teachings. Sixty persons were in the cast, made up of young people and children of St. David's parish.

Rev. Thomas Jenkins took the part of Good Friday. The play is one that is being given throughout the United States in Episcopal churches, as part of a religious-educational movement, and the collections taken at this time are used for church work. The church was beautifully decorated and there was a large attendance, many of the clergy and delegates having remained over to see the play. The church will repeat it at St. Mark's church Sunday evening, May 27, instead of the usual evening service.

Committees Are Named.—The business sessions at and noon day luncheons were held at St. Stephen's church, with the exception of the meetings of the women's auxiliary, which were held in Trinity church. O. W. Taylor, Grace Memorial; C. N. Huggins, A. S. Atwater.

"I find that a number of our amateur gardeners are underestimating the constructive influence of weeds," says L. A. Read, supervisor of school gardeners. "Inspection has brought us to gardens where weeds were being allowed to grow with the vegetables. No garden can be a success if weeds are allowed to grow in it. Success must depend on the thoroughness of cultivation and the eradication of weeds. Weeds not only take the strength of the soil, but absorb moisture that later on will be much needed. If the weeds are pulled or dug up now, it will mean less work later on, and larger production at the end of the season."

Professor A. G. B. Bouquet, head of vegetable gardening at the Oregon Agricultural College, says that today some advice about the pollination of tomatoes, which should be carefully studied. "Home gardeners will find hand pollination of the first clusters of tomato blossoms not only practical, but simple and profitable. Ten or 15 minutes' work every third day or so will result in an increase in the yield, both early and total, and in a more rapid development of the fruit.

"Careful experiments, both under glass and out of doors, have demonstrated the fact that partial sterility of many blossoms is the direct cause of lack of early tomatoes, and in gardens where there are a dozen or two or even more tomato plants, time will be well spent in pollinating the first two or three clusters.

"Home gardeners who are simple, but must be done right to insure satisfactory results. First, the pollen should be collected from some of the flowers, the petals of which are reflexed or curved backward. To do this, hold the finger of one hand under the blossom and catch the pollen as it is tapped or jarred by the first finger of the other hand. I prefer the finger for carrying the pollen, rather than a camel's hair brush or other article. If one flower does not shed its pollen readily, try others until the index finger has a very perceptible amount of white, chalky substance. The next step is to select flowers that are in the right condition to be pollinated. The petals of flowers which have opened wide, as previously mentioned, will later close, and the petals may then be entirely pulled out, leaving the center or pistil of the flower exposed. It is the end of this pistil upon which the pollen should be placed. Apply the pollen by touching the end of the pistil with the finger until it is well covered with pollen. Be very careful not to break the pistil, as the breaking of it would render fertilization useless. After it has received the pollen, the pistil must remain intact until it is definitely fertilized.

"Another method of applying the pollen to the pistil of the flower, without removing the flower after it has closed together, is to fertilize the pistil of the flowers having the petals well curved back and the end of the pistil protruding through the center of the flower. "Any pollen from any other flower may be used to pollinate any other flower. Jarring the vines and blossoms clusters is also beneficial in helping the fruit to set more freely than otherwise."

Wages Advance With Increase in Charges Employees Will Receive $2 More Weekly, Says Frank T. Rogers, Who Explains Why Prices Advance.

The recent rise in prices by the Oregon Barbers association was not made with any desire to squeeze the public, insists Frank T. Rogers, vice president of the association. He points out that the journeyman barbers are to receive $2 a week more wages; that the cost of all supplies has increased; that the employers and the employees want more time for themselves and have therefore reduced their time one hour a day, closing at 7 p. m. instead of at 8 p. m. Special inducements to include in the association the employing barbers of outside towns is to be made. Hotel
