55 MARINES AND 81 BLUEJACKETS IN CITY WITH 13 PIECE BAND

Lieutenant Coovert Brings Oregon Men From Bremerton for Rose Festival.

CIVILIANS GIVE GREETING

Men March From Union Station to Oregon Hotel, Where They Will Make Their Headquarters.

"Squads right, march—compane-e-e huit!" and 55 marines, 81 bluejackets and 13 bandsmen, Lieutenant Lynn B. Coovert commanding, wheeled into line on Park street near Alder and came to position.

After leaving guns and knapsacks in a room in the rear of the Oregon hotel, the men again came to position, receiving instructions to report at 8:45 in the morning, and then a yell, a pattering of feet and bobbing of white caps and 81 bluejackets disappeared. Two of them were seen mysteriously to appear in a machine standing near, and after a flutter of feminine arms they drove the machine away. A few moments later the marines did the same, and the street was empty of everything but amazed civilians.

Portland Boys in Party

They arrived from Bremerton Tuesday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock and marched from there straight to the Oregon hotel, where they are making their headquarters.

"We're here," said Lieutenant Coovert, "to do everything we can do help out. We'll be glad to have you tell us anything you want us for."

Many of the boys are from Portland and they are taking the others to their homes to stay while in the city. They present an appearance somewhat changed from that of a few months ago. They all look tall, and they are straight and march with the full dignity of the nation they are going to uphold. They keep their ranks even, their pace regular, and they tramp, tramp with a beat that makes one want to be in time with them.

Citizens Extend Welcome

As they swung from the Union depot up Sixth street, the civilians lined up hastily and clapped for them, but the men preserved their unbending dignity until relieved of it by the command "Dismissed." Not many persons knew of their coming, and only a few friends were out specially to see them. They marched inconspicuously by fours and to the beat of a lone drum. But, at least, those who were there felt their blood rising and their chests expanding with the knowledge that these were mostly "made in Oregon," and that they had done well in the short time in which they had been preparing to help Old Glory stand for liberty, not only in the home of the free, but all over the world.

BIG CROWDS TAKE PART IN OPENING DAY OF FESTIVAL

ing 3000 boys and girls, was characterized as the most successful event of similar past affairs. Led by the battalion of marines and bluejackets of the Oregon Naval Militia stationed at Bremerton, the parade took on an inspiring air of patriotism and its progress through the humanity banked line of march was the occasion of an unbroken end of cheering.

When the hour hand touches 8 o'clock tonight thousands of onlookers will stand expectant. At that moment President Wilson, seated in the White House, will finger a telegraph key; as the hour strikes he will press the key, and within the Court of Patriotism in Festival Center the replica of the statue of Liberty will be unveiled. Portland's eleventh annual Rose Festival will be officially inaugurated.

GRAND AVENUE TURNED INTO A FAIRYLAND BY PARADE OF CHILDREN

turned the air into a swirling breeze of the national colors.

Colorful Pictures Fascinate

Spectators, however, had little time for analyzing the elements of the parade, it was a succession of fascinating colorful pictures, each held up to the eye for a passing minute and then to blend into the succeeding scene. Little tots, nimble footed and graceful, danced gleefully through the maze of a May day frolic. Each one was costumed and the designer's art with the tints of the painter's palette had been made lavish use of in the creation of what has become decreed as the prettiest of all Portland's Rose Carnival parades.

The parade was formed, of course, of the school children and became, in its portrayal, a tribute to faithfulness and aptitude on the part of the boys and girls in their drills, dances and marchings, as well as to the painstaking care of their instructors. The cheers that greeted the passing parade made manifest the appreciation of the carnival guests.

Naval Reserve Cheered

One of the stirring and inspiring features of the parade was the appearance of the men of the Oregon naval reserve, jackies and marines, and now in service at Bremerton. The battalion was returned to Portland for the purpose of the Rose Festival and took its place of honor in leading the parade this forenoon.

The most interested spectator of the parade was Queen Nina. And fittingly did the charming little monarch review her subjects. Once or twice, though, the majesty of the throne had a tussle with the gleefulness of the happy playmate, and at least once royal dignity fled when a chum was spied and hands were clapped in glee.

Queen Nina Crowned

This afternoon Queen Nina came into her kingdom, when she held levee and within her court of honor she received the allegiance of the mayor of the city. Coincident the city's possession was passed to her little majesty in the symbolic presentation of the golden key to the city's gate.

At 2 o'clock the royal ceremonies were begun. The affairs of state were preceded with a kaleidoscopic picture formed by hundreds of children in drills, under the direction of Professor Robert Krehn.

Surrounded by her princesses and little ladies in waiting and with King Mac as Fer consort, Queen Nina was crowned by President Larimore of the Rose Festival association.

House Was Clean But Too Hot for Mr. Scales' Chicks

Thomas Scales, 601 Allegheny street, St. Johns, Tuesday thought it was about time to fumigate his chicken coop.

Mr. Scales got busy, chased out the chickens, washed and scrubbed the floors and lighted the fumigators. At the end of the day the chicken coop was a home fit for prize chickens.

The chickens went back to their home, rejoicing in its cleanliness. The evening hours passed. Strange noises were heard at about 11:30 o'clock and Mr. Scales woke up to find the chicken coop in flames.

After the fire was extinguished about a dozen of the chickens were found, roasted to death.

Moral: Extinguish the fumigator flames and see that all sparks are gone before putting the chickens to bed, says the fire bureau.

Milton Strawberry Festival Is Success

Parade Is Feature—Patriotism Keynote of Celebration—Girls Give Drill—Flags of Allied Nations Unfurled.

Milton, Or., June 13.—The big event of the season here, Milton's annual Strawberry day, was observed Tuesday, under the auspices of the Red Cross society. At an early hour many visitors came from Walla Walla, the interurban cars being crowded. Pendleton and other Umatilla towns were well represented, and from the surrounding country the pleasure seekers came in numbers. It is estimated that between 4000 and 5000 were present.

The morning ceremonies consisted of a parade led by the Twin City brass band and floats. The Girls' Honor Guard of Pendleton competed with the Milton-Freewater Honor Guard for the prizes offered by the management.

Claude Still headed the G. A. R. veterans. Then came the Commercial club, city council and social and civic organizations, followed by the Red Cross members and the Girls' Honor Guard.

In the afternoon the address of welcome was given by Mayor Hobbs. "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner" were sung by a chorus of 200, led by Rev. Floyd Ross. There was a flag drill by 16 girls. The speaker was Rev. J. E. Snyder of Pendleton.

The afternoon program was brought to a close by the chorus singing the national anthems of Great Britain, France and America, and the unfurling of the flag of each nation.

Miss Alice Butler of Pendleton gave a food talk during the afternoon.

Man Shocked by High Voltage Better

William B. Jett, who was injured at the Knott street sub-station of the Portland, Railway Light & Power Co., late Tuesday night when 10,000 volts of electricity shot through his body, is greatly improved this morning and will recover.

Mr. Jett, who is employed as a construction foreman for the railway company, was testing a transformer when the accident happened. The machinery had just been installed and he was repairing a switch, using a long pole when he came in contact with the wires. Witnesses could not explain the accident other than that they saw a flash of light and Jett fell to the floor unconscious. He was taken to Good Samaritan hospital and attended by Dr. A. E. Rockey. Jett lives at 1227 Belmont street.

French Troop Ship Sunk; Many Drown

Some of the missing are Senegalese troops. The Sequana was formerly the City of Corinth.

The man put the child down, leaped out of the library window and fled in an automobile. Karl Oesterle, the father, offered a reward for the capture of the would-be kidnaper.

Council Session Is Called to Order but Adjourns in Minute

Will H. Daly, commissioner of public utilities, took his seat in the mayor's place at the head of the city council's table in the city hall this morning. The hour was 10 and the occasion the regular Wednesday council meeting.

Across the table from him sat Sigel Grutze, the council's reading clerk and Miss Roslyn Joseph, clerk. The other chairs were vacant. The sunshine filled the room and Sergeant-at-Arms Fones nervously waited for the council to begin.

"Council will come to order," said Commissioner Daly, rapping with the gavel on the top of the mahogany table.

"The clerk will call the roll," he continued.

Grutze looked up and began. "Mayor, Baker, Bigelow, Daly and Dieck."

Silence greeted all names but Daly.

"Council's adjourned until 2 o'clock.

The machinery came to a sudden stop and thus ended the shortest council meeting in the history of commission government in Portland. It lasted less than a minute.

Owing to the absence of Mayor Albee, Daly was chairman of the meeting. The mayor and Commissioners Bigelow and Baker were viewing the children's parade. Commissioner Dieck was out of the city.
