

CLUB WOMEN GATHER AND DEVOTE TIME TO PRACTICAL ACTIVITIES

ART DISPLAY IS MADE

Mrs. Alice Weister Gives Lecture on Pictures; Business Men Speak for Home Industries.

The East Side clubhouse, corner East Tenth and Weidler streets, was on Wednesday the center of much delightful and practical activity.

In the afternoon in the main auditorium the art department of the Portland Women's club and the Co-operative league held an art exhibit, displaying 25 color reproductions of the works of early and modern American artists.

In the main parlor of the clubhouse the Portland Women's club gave a large benefit card party at which $50 was realized, which will be forwarded to Lieutenant Esther Pohl Lovejoy in France to assist in her work among the women and children of the devastated portions of that country.

Home Products Encouraged. A King Wilson gave a practical address on the wisdom of using Oregon products and on the power at hand, notably electricity, claiming it to be the cheapest power available in the Northwest.

Rev. Oswald Taylor gave a spirited address on the value of cooperation and complimented the women on their practical efforts to bring about recognition of Oregon products.

Club Activities

WHAT the woman's mass meeting to boost the Liberty bonds lacked in attendance it made up in vigor and enthusiasm. The meeting was held Wednesday afternoon at Central library, with only about 25 present, but each one was given a message, which if carried to as many more women, cannot do other than result in great good.

MENTAL RUST PRESAGES OLD AGE. In one of Juliana Ewing's delightful stories a little girl exclaims excitedly, "Then I shall grow an old woman, my know," a truth both tragic and glorious.

Of course, there are a myriad facts which at one time or another have been in our possession, but which have slipped apparently away into the unknown; but, as a matter of fact, they are really still there, hidden behind the more lately acquired and more important knowledge like some forgotten trifles fallen behind the larger lumber in a disused garret, and when the occasion arises the chances are that a very little effort will be required to bring them apparently vanished information into use.

There is no joy like the joy of acquiring knowledge; nothing which keeps the mind so alert, so alive. The pleasures of doing are as nothing in comparison, for the first time really worth while. But, be it for good or ill, one thing is sure—what we know we can never unlearn!

Mental rust is one of the most insidious of diseases. It steals on us before we recognize the first symptoms, and unless we have unusual powers of will it is virtually incurable. Have you not known many before you own grandchild, and add a new idea, whose minds appear to be barred and shuttered against any glimmer of today's sun? The locks and hinges of their mental door are rusted, the wheels of their spiritual machinery are bound with rust and dust, and so they become too old and cumbersome to use.

Such people often start out with a good amount of intelligence and education, but wits are like knives; if they are not kept in constant use, sharpened and ground, they first become dull and then rust sets in and comes dull and then rust sets in and comes dull and then rust sets in.

About Steger Pianos

It is too often the custom with lovers of music, and with piano buyers generally, to judge of their needs from the standpoint of a distorted sense of economy. It is too often the case that pianos are bought with the view of price uppermost.

In the manufacture of the Steger pianos the aim is not merely to produce good pianos. The ambition from the first has been to create pianos of extraordinary character. And the result is that Steger pianos have won the respect of critical pianists and are the favorites of critical people everywhere.
