

"God Punish England"

A German Battle Cry

—by Henry R. Hayek

Across the Belgian frontier a great German army was set into motion in the summer of 1914, devastating, burning, destroying and murdering whatever came in its path.

That army, under the direction of the Prussian military clique, had one objective, and that objective was Paris. The means of accomplishing this made little difference. If it was military expediency to invade Belgium—why, that was a matter of war, and everything is fair in war.

But England could not see it that way. It was a treacherous and murderous violation of Belgium's neutrality which England, by treaty, was bound to prevent being violated.

And, because England declared war—the only humane, honorable, decent and Christian thing she could do—the wrath of Germany called upon Deity and coined the phrase—"GOD PUNISH ENGLAND."

The Allies stand for liberty and human rights.

Germany stands for the principle that might is right.
