"Salomy Jane" Pleases at. Baker

Members of Company Are Al Well Cast and They Give Fine Rendition of Harte Play.

PATRONS of the Baker this week have an opportunity of again seeing Walter Gilbert and his awistant stage manager in the cast. Mr. Gilbert usually contents himself with directing, except on weeks of more auspicious bills, but "Salomy Jane" calls for more characters than do most of the dramas concocted today, and so this week Mr. Gilbert plays "Red Pete" Heath. The entire cast is well suited to present "Salomy Jane." Edgar Everett plays the hero, and Miss Ruth Gates Salomy Jane, who loves him. Smith Davies has ample opportunity for comedy as the stage driver. George Taylor is as good as usual, and James Guy-Usher gives a fine characterization of Marbury, the gambler. There is fine old Bret Harte atmophere in the play and it is as pleasing this week at the Baker as it was when first presented years ago.

Pantages

Of noteworthy comparative excellence is the new Pantages bill which opened Monday matinee.

Mary Dorr with a good singing voice and a comedienne's personality. tops the well stocked bill. She sings and dances and wears pretty gowns. The Kahler babies, a boy and girl, do some whirlwind stepping and win a houseful of applause. They are interesting little tots.

Havnes and Montgomery present a skit called "The Deputy." They sing well and for that might put a couple of more songs in their act.

There's a cabaret musical redeemed partly by a jazz band and swift action. A dance is featured. Walter Goodwin and Clyde Hager are remembered because of the finale of their act. They end a singing turn with an imitation of the sounds in the animal tent at a circus.

The Germans' attack on Rhelms, pregaret Lester, close the bill. A patriotic picture opens.
