YOUNG CLOW IS DEMON FOR TOIL EVEN THOUGH HE DOESN'T MAKE GOOD

LaPine Lollapalooza Likes Nothing Better Than to Pitch Each Day and His Perseverance Has Earned Him Job With Bill Fisher; Salt Lake Trio of Pitchers Come in For Jostling.

By R. A. Cronin
MANAGER BILL FISHER has been completely crossed up by "Iron Man" Clow, the LaPine lightning rod, and so have a lot of other young men who follow baseball.

Clow may not amount to three whoops in a ball yard, so far as pitching is concerned, and again he may be a second Cicotte, minus the shine ball. The LaPine youngster doesn't need any freakish stuff to get by, judging from the display of push he has on the ball.

In the writer's experience around baseball camps, which has been long enough to catalogue the various spring complaints of ball players, young and old, he is frank to state that he has never seen another like Clow. Irve Higginbotham, in his palmy days, never put in a harder week than the short arm youngster did in the Regular-Yanigan games of last week.

Fisher frankly admits that he was not much impressed by Clow. The LaPine boy emitted an odor of sagebrush that could be whiffed all over Eastern Oregon. He even wound up with men on bases and the steals were something awful, but he has been learning the points of baseball not yet observed strictly around LaPine, and if he ever amounts to anything will have himself to thank.

Strength of Arm Remarkable
Fisher has been short on pitchers in the camp of the California variety, who pitch during the winter and consequently are in shape to travel nine innings in training camp. Clow had been working out a little. It is in fact, weather would not admit of any consistent training before he reached Pendleton. Therefore, it is all the more remarkable that he has the strength he has in his right arm.

Who's the Pitcher?
Bill Fisher has been under the strain of a bit of jostling about his pitching acquisition from Salt Lake. "I see that pitcher of yours isn't going very good," for Walter McCredie," said a wag.

Opposition Is Increasing to Jess-Fred Tilt

St. Paul, Minn., April 24.—(U. N. S.)—Walter Miller will be able to stage the Willard-Fulton championship match here on July 4 is still doubtful. So much opposition to holding the bout here has developed that it is intimated that the state safety commission will not permit the fight. The commission has the matter under advisement but has set no date for a decision.
