'True Blue' With Farnum Is Pleasing

Said to Be Equal of "A Tale of Two Cities," "When a Man Sees Red."

MOVIE theatre goers have an opportunity of seeing William Farnum in a play said to be fully the equal of "A Tale of Two Cities" and "When a Man Sees Red," at the Majestic theatre, where the film "True Blue" is now on the screen. Farnum plays the part of a western ranch owner in his own style, always pleasing to followers of screen dramas.

Growing up in the West and living the western life, Farnum, playing the role of Bob McKeever, becomes the central figure of the play, his father, an English "remittance" man, deserting his mother to return to England to claim his inheritance. In following years, McKeever's mother dies and his father, learning of this, remarries and has another son who in after years meets his half-brother on a western ranch. McKeever's half-brother, dissipated, weak and unconscious of the relationship, is regenerated and sent back to England a man. A love story runs through the plot bringing the half-brothers into apparent rivalry. Humor also finds frequent expression throughout the plot.

COMING FEATURES

HIPPODROME—May Yohe, in her day internationally famous as a beauty and entertainer, will offer an original novelty at the Hippodrome at the new show beginning Sunday afternoon. In a French inventor's automobile headlight a lump of fireproof substance is heated to incandescence by an oxy-acetylene jet and can be turned out of the focus of the reflector to prevent glare.

CARMEL MYERS, the subject of our picture today, is so well and popularly known as to probably need no further introduction. In "The City of Tears," her newest picture, Miss Myers has the role of an Italian chorus girl in a pickle factory.

Madame Petrova Boosts W. S. S. Sales

MADAME OLGA PETROVA, Polish actress and screen star, sold $12,630 worth of War Savings Stamps at the Liberty theatre Friday afternoon and evening. The affair took on the nature of a patriotic rally and vaudeville entertainment, with Madame Petrova and Bobby North, vaudevilist, her manager, holding the center of the stage.

Madame Petrova was introduced by Marshall N. Dana, representing the Oregon War Savings Stamp organization. She made an earnest plea that every man, woman and child do not only his bit to help win the war, but that every one do his "d—dest."

Portland Women Help

Pledge cards were distributed through the audiences by the following women: Miss Rosemary Baldwin, Miss Nellie Hemenway, Mrs. Ralph W. Hurlburt, Mrs. Ernest Hunt, Miss Sybil Brown, Miss V'Ona Guthrie, Miss Dorothy Faul, Mrs. A. T. Caswell, Miss Lucile Shepherd, Miss Harriet Cummings, Mrs. Frank McCauley, Miss Jean McLeod, Miss Anna Beckwith, Miss Nan Montgomery, Miss Georgianna Mears, Miss Evelyn Fitzgibbon, Miss Jean Stevens, Miss Dorothy McGuire, Miss Gretchen Klosterman, Miss Virginia McDonough, Miss Florence Johnson, Miss Marjorie McGuire, Miss Lella Guthrie, Miss Gladys Ferrall, Miss Florence Hemenway and Mrs. W. J. Maxwell.

Manager North auctioned autographed pictures of the star and her campaign song, prices ranging from $100 to $250, payable in War Stamps, and altogether it was a happy event.

Madame Petrova complimented Oregon on its success in already being over the top in the matter of W. S. S. pledges.

Petrova on the Screen

Baffling in every detail is the mystery that surrounds the death of Woodruffe Clay, a wealthy profligate, in "The Life Mask," in which Madame Petrova was seen on the screen at the same performance, the show continuing today.

The role played by Madame Petrova is that of Anita Courtland, the beautiful daughter of General Courtland, deceased. She breaks her engagemeint with Captain Hugh Shannon and becomes the unwilling wife of Woodruffe Clay, from whom her mother had borrowed $5000 and raised the check to $25,000, in order to save her spendthrift mother and the family name from disgrace.

There follows a life of strife. During one of their quarrels Anita pushes Clay away from her so violently that his head hits against a piano and causes concussion of the brain. He is confined to his bed for several months, and one night when Anita relieves her husband's trained nurse, she, a somnambulist by this time, falls asleep and dreams that she poisons her husband. When the nurse returns she finds Clay dead, and Anita, stunned by this fact, mentally accuses herself of poisoning him, but she is freed by a coroner's jury. She goes to Spain with her faithful nurse, when she is thrown into a panic by reading an American paper, in which she is charged with murdering her husband.

Lady Menthel, still seeking a husband for her daughter, are in Spain, as is Captain Shannon, who, to forget his troubles, went to war and was wounded. To get away from the ubiquitous mother he moves to a quiet part of the city of Seville, where he finds Anita. When Lady Menthel hears of their meeting she informs the police, and when the officers are seen approaching her home she flees to her room, followed by Hugh, where they find the body of the nurse with a note to Anita.

The note clears up the mystery and Anita and Hugh honeymoon in Spain.

LOCAL WAR WORK

Her majesty, the queen of Belgium, in a cable sent to the Belgian minister at Washington, D. C., asks the women's division of the committee of public information to express to the women of America her admiration for their war work. Count de Jehay of the cabinet of King Albert, sends the cable, which reads as follows:

"Please transmit to the women's division of the committee on public information the following message: 'I am directed by the queen on the occasion of the Independence day to inform you that her majesty wishes to express her admiration for the work the women of America are doing for the allied cause.'

"COUNT DE JEHAY,
"Chef du Cabinet du Roi.

"July 4, 1918."

The war has so seriously depleted the working forces of the Santa Fe shops at Topeka that a number of girl apprentices garbed in overalls, their hair "done up" and nearly completely covered by jaunty caps, are working alongside the men in the tool and upholstering departments. The work costume of the girls is so similar to that worn by the men that at a short distance it is not easy to distinguish them from their coworkers. Although they have been on the job only a short time, Superintendent Drury says they are learning fast, and when they have served their apprenticeship they will be paid the same wages as the men.

Wisconsin Society

The Wisconsin society will hold its annual picnic Sunday at Columbia park with lunch at 1.30 o'clock. Coffee will be furnished by the society. Soldiers and sailors should be remembered with extra cups and well filled lunch baskets. Games and amusements for all have been arranged. All Wisconsinites and soldiers and sailors from Wisconsin are invited.

Mrs. Amelia Ruegg, president of the Sellwood Lavender club, branch 111, and much beloved by the people of that district, celebrated her birthday Wednesday at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Eisert, with whom she has recently been making her home. In honor of the event Mrs. Eisert invited in a number of friends, including the "Lavender ladies" and the women of the Presbyterian church, and the pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. W. McCullogh.

Mrs. Eisert gave piano selections and Mrs. Moore sang, "Mother's Song." Informal talks were given by Mrs. J. White, the senior member of the Lavender club, who said of the many organizations she had belonged to, she had never enjoyed any as much as the Lavender club. Others followed with congratulatory remarks for the honor guest. Many beautiful flowers and other rememberances were showered, upon Mrs. Ruegg. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Eisert, assisted by Mrs. Kelley, Mrs. Moore and Miss Mooney.

Bed Time Tales

BY CLARA INGRAM JUDSON

Jimmy Coon and His Friends at the Bee Tree

YOU would have laughed heartily, if you could have seen Jimmy Coon and his friends at the bee tree that night. You remember that Little William, the farmer boy, had discovered that splendid bee tree, and he planned to come in the morning with two big tin milk pails to get the honey.

But, you see, that cunning Jimmy Coon had followed the farmer boy, and found out the secret of the bee tree. And Jimmy had a fine motto in his life, and it was this, "Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today!" That motto had made Jimmy a great success in life. When Jimmy and the friends had reached the big hollow chestnut, the bee tree, Teddy Possum was allowed to climb up first, and get his rope-like tail around the branches, to see if he could find the front door to the wild honey bees.

And he found it awfully quick, with a yell, that sounded like a dozen wild Indians. It was this way: While Teddy Possum was dangling around in the branches of that tree, poking his nose into every hole he could see, he was hanging by his monkey-like tail to a branch; and he yelled to the crowd below: "There ain't no bees in this tree. Jimmy has made a mistake. It isn't a bee tree at all. And I knew it all the time."

And at that moment, Teddy's pants felt awfully hot in the seat, and he put both hands on the stinging place, and hollowed, "Oh, yes, it is a bee tree, all right. There are plenty of bees here for me. Oh, Oh, Oh!" And Teddy Possum's rope-like tail was stung by the bees so terribly, that he let go the branch, and went bouncing from limb to limb down that bee tree, while he screamed louder at every jolt. And the terrible fall knocked the breath out of poor Teddy Possum. But he got his second wind after a while.

Then Cousin Bruin spoke up, "Now, you fellows look at me, and I'll show you how to get that nice honey!" And Cousin Bruin, the big Black Bear, went up that tree, like a huge cat.

Teddy Possum's rope-like tail was stung by the bees so terribly, that he let go the branch.

But the door into the house of the wild honey bees was so small that Cousin Bruin couldn't get his right paw into the hole. But Cousin Bruin is quite a carpenter; and he had his tools with him. And his chisel-like teeth, and his knife-like claws tore a big hole right into that hollow chestnut tree. And the crowd below saw Cousin Bruin poke his right arm into that big hole he made; and when he pulled out his right arm, there was a huge piece of honey in his right hand, and his whole right arm was dripping with sweetness.

And the crowd below yelled out, "Cousin Bruin, don't be a pig. Throw us down some nice pieces of that lovely honey-comb!"

Household Hints

A friend of mine—an elderly gentleman—told me of an experience with two pretty stenographers. The moment I say "pretty stenographers," your mind pictures forth girls of dash and smash as to dress and looks and your mind is right, in this case—or rather, in these cases.

The first girl seemed to be in charge of an office when the gentleman entered to make inquiry regarding the making of some steel castings. The young woman, who was idling over a magazine, looked up languidly and awaited his inquiry. Listlessly she replied: "No, I don't think this firm bothers with anything as small as that," and swept him out of vision as her eyes dropped to the book.

At the second place a girl also was in charge—one quite as pretty as the first, daintily but appropriately dressed, and upon the entrance of the man she arose, came forward and brightly and interestedly asked his wants. "No," she said, "I'm afraid our firm cannot do that, but I will call up one which I think might be interested," and she went to the telephone, called up a firm, then made elaborate inquiries as to his knowledge of some other firm which might do the work, since his firm did not. She wrote down the name of the firm recommended, called it up and told it that a man wished such and such work done and asked if they could do it. All this, for someone unknown and from whom she could not expect the slightest benefit. And upon his departure she wished the man success in his undertaking. Could there be a more striking contrast than between these two pretty stenographers?

Bermuda Salad—Arrange the salad bowl with lettuce. Now slice one large Bermuda onion very thin, one cupful of cold cooked string beans, one tomato, cut into small bits. Serve with highly seasoned French dressing. Garnish with quarters of hard boiled egg.

Oyster and Chicken Pie—Parboil a chicken, cut up into small pieces and place in a deep baking dish. Over this place one pint of oysters. Add two hard boiled eggs cut into small pieces, a tablespoonful of butter substitute, some celery chopped fine, salt and cayenne. Moisten with flour and a gill of milk, put a puff paste on top and bake about 40 minutes in a moderate oven.

Springing Spring Styles—Beaded tassels are used for sash ends.

Colored waists are in great demand.

Jersey is being made for evening wear.

The little pony coats are back again.

Satin is being used for separate skirts.

Foulards continue in increasing favor.

Embroidery and braiding both appear on fine coats.

Metal cloths and laces appear on evening gowns veiled.

Skirts with panel trimmings recall the styles of 1880.

Worth Knowing—When a velvet ribbon bow on a hat has been caught in the rain it can be restored by running a heated curling iron under the loop, etc. Wind a wet cloth over the iron before using.

A pretty knitting bag for the little schoolgirl can be made of coarse than linen with cardboard pasted on and finished around the edges with stitching.

There is no difference in flavor between dark red and light red cranberries. As the light berries generally sell for less than the dark ones, it is more economical to buy them.

A rolling pin of glass in which ice is put brings pastry to that degree of coldness which is essential to lightness of crust.

If a stiff pad made of a folded tea towel is inserted in a sleeve where it is too narrow for the iron to reach, the difficulty of pressing satisfactorily will be solved. The sleeve can then be ironed on both sides without fear of wrinkles.

A pair of storm bloomers made of an old raincoat will keep the little girl's undergarments perfectly dry when she is playing in the snow.

In a novel automatic cooker live steam is used to distribute the heat from the electrical unit to the food receptacles.

Women Take Up Mechanics of Aviation

Three Plucky Boston Girls Learning All About Airplanes to Release Men for Flying.

IN BOSTON three girls are learning the mechanical part of aviation in preparation to take the places of men working on planes so that they may take their places in the fighting line, on the ground or in the air. Each has had to agree, upon entering upon the course, to get a job at the work, taking the place of a fighting man, directly they have been awarded their diplomas.

One of the young women is earning her course in aviation study by doing stenography and typewriting during the afternoons to allow her to study planes and motors in the mornings and evenings, so anxious is she to learn the mechanical end of aviation.

She is not going to stop there, either, she says, for the school is teaching ground work also, and Miss Beal is not to be satisfied until she actually knows how to guide a plane in the air.

She took a course in nursing at the Beverly hospital and is a graduate nurse, but prefers to go into the more thrilling part of the war, rather than to take care of the wounded. The fact that she knows nursing, she thinks, will make her more valuable in war work than the ordinary woman and she sees no failure to get into the war service as an aviator when she is fully educated in the work of building a plane and running it, too.

The orders of the government prohibiting private flying is the only obstacle she sees to prevent her learning the whole business in the school she now attends and she hopes that the government will find some way of using women in the lighter phases of flying before the war ends.

Women are well fitted, she thinks, for the work of carrying messages, making observations and directing, by airplanes, the aim of the artillery on the allied lines, thus releasing the men who are now doing such work and who might, she says, be better used in the fighting forces.

The three young women are all residents of the Back Bay. Besides Miss Beal there are Miss M. Jacobs and Miss Bernice Davenport.

In the school which the young ladies attend the full course of airplane building is taught, and these young ladies are taking a full mechanical course, so that they will be able to build an airplane, motor and all, and be able to do all their own repairs when their planes go wrong. All the work taught is from blue prints, according to the government's specifications.

They will be taught to make all the woodwork on a plane and to operate the machinery. They will make the fittings and turnbuckles, the bending and splicing of the wire, etc. Then they will be sent into the assembling department and learn to assemble the planes and to "dope" and varnish the wings. The bending of all the wires and splicing and soldering of cables will be part of the course.

Bending and the lamination of the woodwork, so necessary in airplane building, will be taught them, as well as brazing and soldering the tubing, upholstering the cockpit and cushions, placing the instrument board and the instruments, connecting up the controls, both stick and "dep" control, as required by the government.

They will then be taken to the training field, where three complete machines will be at their service for "ground" work. The school has 11 airplanes and 16 motors.

Another department in which they will take training is that of the assembling of magnetos and carburetors, and much other light work which it is figured that women can well do.

'Doctor' With Cash And Glasses Sought

Residents of Kelso, Wash., are endeavoring to find trace of an itinerant oculist or optician who gave the name of Dr. G. W. McRoberts and his address as Portland. One correspondent of The Journal writes that the doctor secured $30 and a $12.50 pair of glasses from her, promising to adjust the glasses and be back within a short time. He has not since reappeared, she says, although he left several months ago.

The correspondent says many people in Kelso have been victimized by traveling doctors and hundreds of dollars have been taken out, with little in return to show for the money.

The correspondent asks that anyone knowing the address of this Dr. McRoberts notify her at Lock Box 284, Kelso, Wash.

Extension Course In Home Economcis

Eugene, Or., July 13. — A practice house in home economics is to be established at the University of Oregon the coming school year, according to Miss Lillian Tingle, the head of the department. Two new instructors and several new courses have been announced by Miss Tingle. The instructors are Miss Antoinette Shumsway of the University of Washington and Miss Helen Rhodes of Portland, while Miss Holmes will teach household arts and science, including home decoration.

John Drew Under Knife

New York, July 13.—John Drew, the noted actor, has undergone an operation at the Manhattan Ear and Throat hospital for a cataract formation which had impaired his vision. It was said today the operation had been entirely successful and that his sight probably will be fully restored when he is permitted to return to his country estate at East Hampton, N. J., a month hence.

AMUSEMENTS

OAKS AMUSEMENT PARK
CHAT NO. 46

The whole world salutes our soldiers, whether they be privates or officers. To them has been entrusted the winning of the greatest battle of the centuries—Civilization against Barbarism. That they will do so no one doubts. And what fine things may be left for us after the struggle must be credited to them. It is they who will make the supreme sacrifice, for greater love hath no man that he lay down his life for another. North, East, South and West—each takes its hat off to the man in khaki and wishes him Godspeed. It is well that we send him away smiling, for the merry uniformed youth we greet today, tomorrow may be on his way to end Chaos and restore Order. Probably we shall not see him again, but have only the memory of his uncomplaining face to say that he did his duty as an American citizen.

Today theatres and other places of amusement are recognizing the soldier by putting him first in line and allowing him to pass through free. The Oaks Amusement Park prides itself on the fact that it inaugurated this more than a year ago. Since then the practice has been kept up without variance. Hundreds of the boys avail themselves of it every week. We wish hundreds of others would do the same thing. We should like to see every soldier in Portland or who comes to Portland visit the Oaks Amusement Park as often as he feels a desire to be entertained. The park is open to him free of charge at all times.
