

THE WAR IN PICTORIAL REVIEW

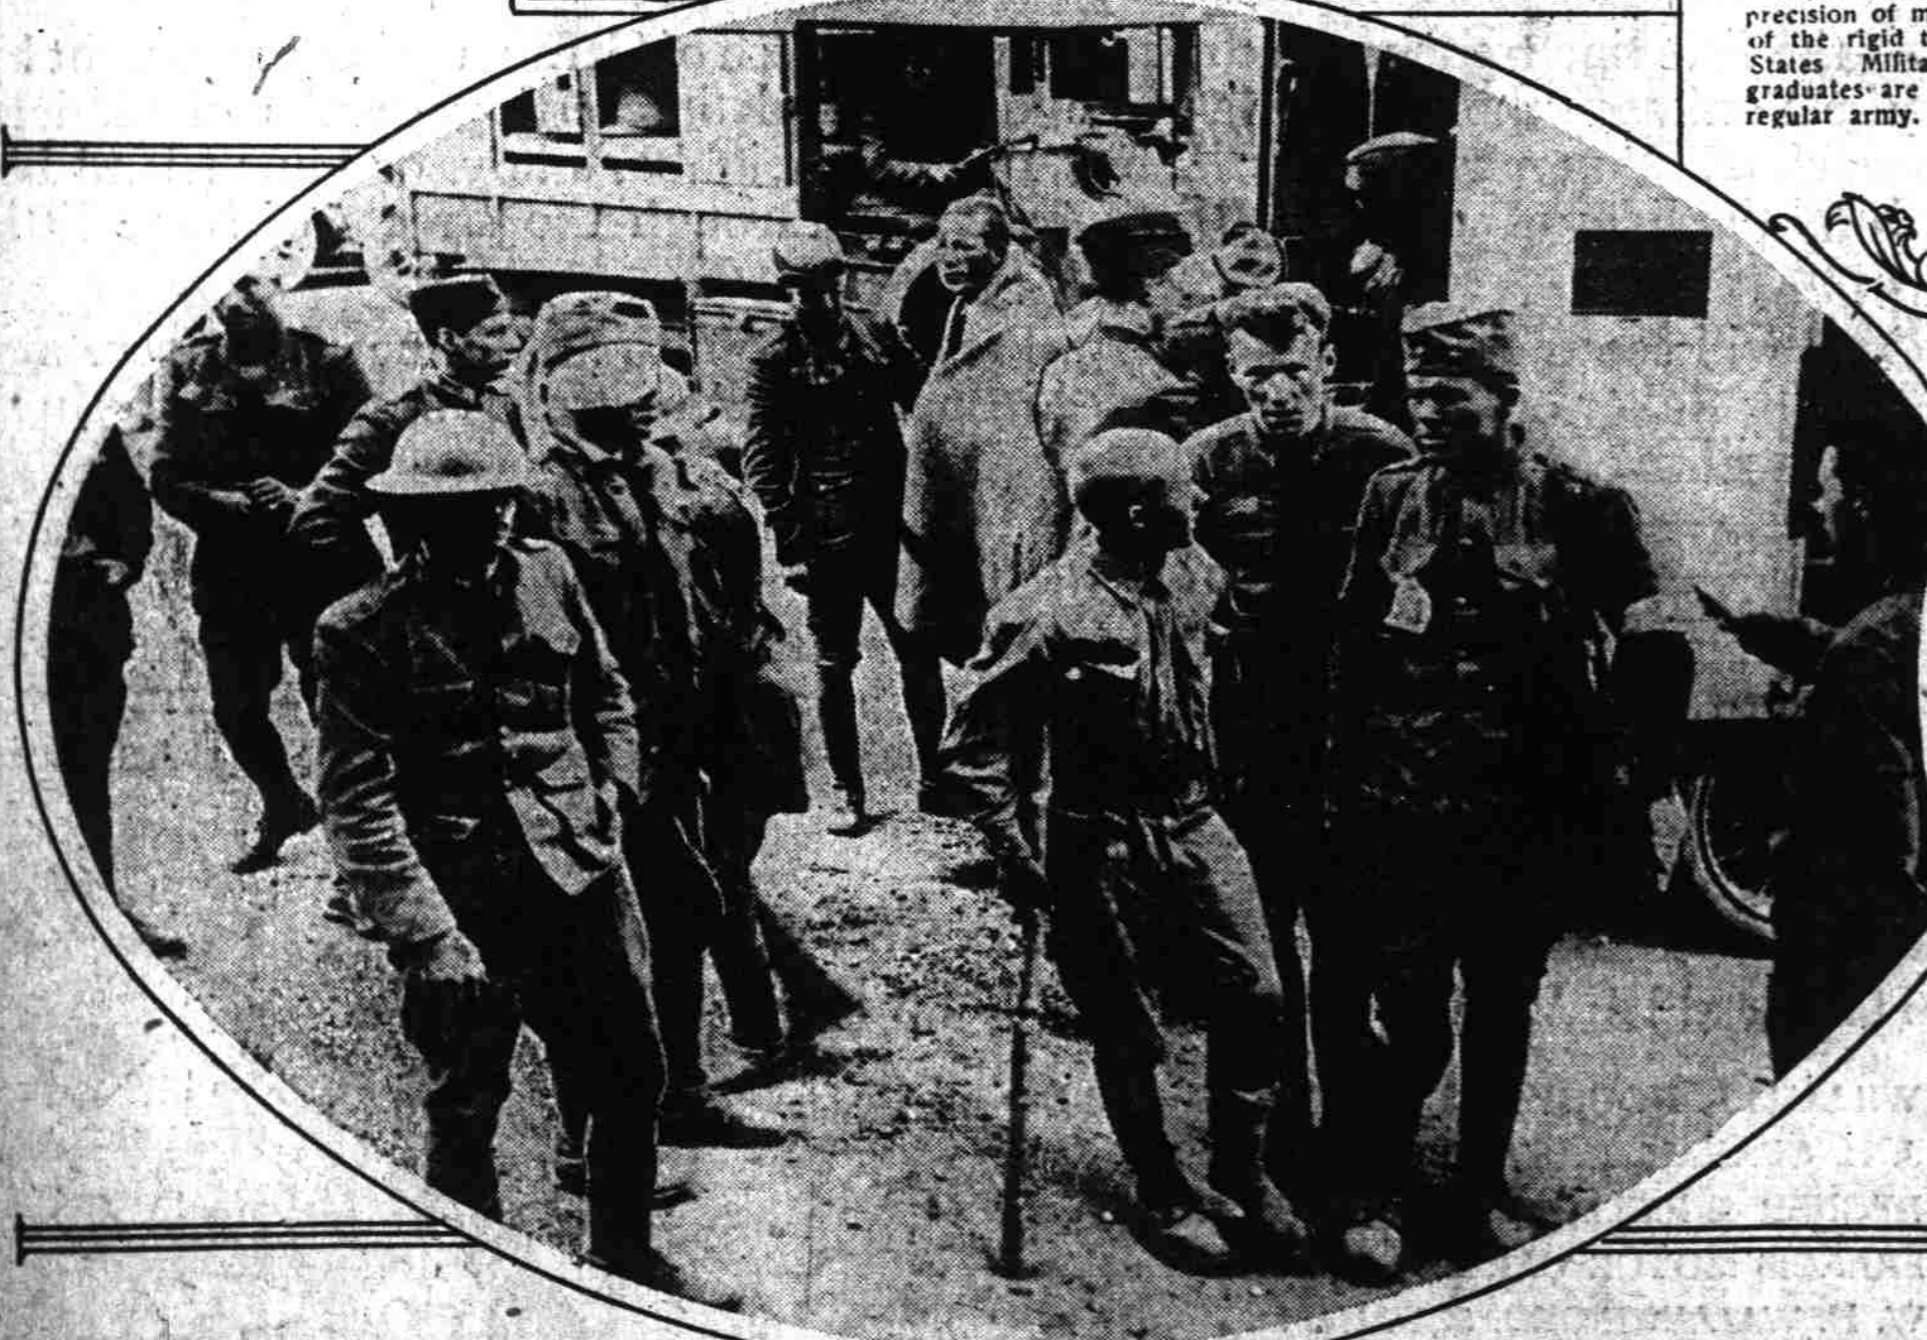

The 1919 class at the United States Naval academy was graduated in three years. Photograph shows the 197 graduates who thus are released for immediate service as naval officers assembled to hear an address by Secretary of the Navy Daniels.

Hardy Italian artillerymen off for the front. These are the type of soldiers who have routed the Austrian invaders on the Piave, thus effecting for their country another Varne and striking for the allied cause another telling blow at the Teutonic powers.

West Point cadets parade. The precision of movement is indicative of the rigid training at the United States Military academy whose graduates are commissioned in the regular army.

Scene in the courtyard of the American Base Hospital at Neuilly showing the arrival of American wounded from the battle sector. Many of the ambulance men engaged in bringing back the boys worked for eighty hours without sleep.

View of a section of an elaborate trench system that enabled the Italians to score heavily over the Austrians in the recent drive begun by the latter. After months of patient waiting the Italians not only have turned the enemy, but have repelled them in rout.
