YOUNG MEN URGED TO ENLIST IN COLLEGE TRAINING CORPS NOW

Following Passage of New Draft Act Boys May Have Trouble Enlisting in Corps.

Young men between the ages of 18 and 21 years who have completed their high school courses are definitely urged by the war department to enlist at once in the students' army training corps at some college or university, before the draft age is lowered by congress. News has come to President Postor of Reed college, where a unit of the corps is to be established this fall, that it may be difficult after the new draft law has been passed, to enlist in the corps and thus take the nearest way to the earning of an officer's commission. Enlistment in the corps does not promise commissions to all, but it is now the plainest road leading in that direction.

When the day arrives on which, according to his order number, the student would have been drafted, had he not already enlisted, the fact is reported to the president of his college, who in turn reports it to the commanding officer and thence to the adjutant general. The president of the college and the commanding officer will then report to the chairman of the committee on education and special training of the war department for what facts of service the individual is in their opinion best qualified. They will recommend that the student should continue his studies to prepare for the work in medicine, engineering, chemistry, psychology, economics, etc., or that he should go to an officers' training camp at once to prepare for an officer's commission in the infantry, artillery, etc., or that he should be assigned to work in the ordnance, quartermaster or other staff corps or sent immediately to a division at one of the camps.

Opportunity will be given for the enlisted student, who so elects, to transfer from army to navy and vice versa, and to be assigned to active service in one of the various corps of the army upon the recommendation of the president of the college and the proper military authority.
