Wonderful Film Feature at Liberty

Griffith's Newest Picture, "Great Love," Boasts of Royalty Among Cast Members.

IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S newest picture "The Great Love," that opened today at the Liberty theater, the master-director has called upon the great players of the film drama but he has not stopped there. Taken in England amid many scenes of intrigue and counter-intrigue, he has even induced the queen, queen-mother, the daughter of former Premier Asquith, Lady Diana Manners and others of the royal and near-royal families to take parts in the production and the effect might be the stronger.

The story of the play is old and simple—a story of love and struggle and reward, with the great war as a background and the dark deeds of the invincible and sinister power to lend grim modernity to it all. The outstanding feature of the picture as Portland Theatergoers saw it, is its reality. Jim Young meets and loves Sunie Broadbents of the English village. Jim saves a munitions plant from destruction and the pictures show Hun bombs and Zeppelins in action over London. The part of Jim is taken by Robert Har-ron, who is a soldier in Canada's first army. Lillian Gish as Sunie has even greater opportunity for her acting power than in "The Hearts of the World," the great piece that preceded this.

The sweeping climax when the German spies kill themselves, is brought about through a series of minor climaxes featuring the two principal actors. The reels are rich in battle pictures, some of them actually taken at the front line trenches.

The parts taken by the women of England's nobility, while small, indicate the importance the British government holds the picture in its effect upon the people.

"LES MISERABLES" GOOD

"Les Miserables" Victor Hugo's masterpiece, with William Farnum taking the part of Jean Valjean, is the new attraction at the Majestic theater. The long career of one of the most noted characters in literature, from the time of his stealing a loaf of bread to keep his sister and children from starving, his life in the galleys, his escape, and his lifelong struggle to live a good life and avoid the clutches of the inspector of police who constantly hounds him and tries to bring him back to the galleys, is depicted by Farnum in a play wound about suffering and sacrifice. "Farnum's doughboys" are also shown in an official war review released by the committee on public information. Hearst's Pathe news as well as a good comedy are also in the bill.

RAY IN FINE PLAY

Charles Ray in "A Nine O'Clock Town," opens the new bill today at the Columbia theater. As David Clary, the son of a small town merchant, Ray leaves home the day prior to opening the new "Emporium" because his father decides the son's ideas are too extravagant, leaving Katherine behind. He gets a job as the salesman in a department store, is robbed of his watch and money, appears late to work the next day and loses his job. Meanwhile, the father has not made a success with the store, and sends for David, who starts in as manager by doing some sensational advertising. The vampire appears again, but after several complications things are righted and David marries Katherine after he has sold the "Emporium" for $75,000, got a position as manager thereof and employs his father as assistant.

Ray is supported in the cast by Jane Hearn, Otto Hoffman, Arthur H. Clark, Catherine Young and Dorcas Mathew.

Manufacturers, wholesalers and large retailers, in response to a request, have reported to the war industries board stocks of hand knitting yarns. Where quantities and quantities have warranted, the American Red Cross has asked owners of stocks to sell to them at a nominal profit. It is gratifying to announce that there has been prompt and hearty cooperation.

There are, however, thousands of smaller merchants not listed in trade organizations who will esteem it a privilege to offer their stocks for consideration of the American Red Cross and they are requested to report at once to the war industries board their stocks of hand knitting yarns, both woolen and worsted, in Oxford, khaki, natural and natural gray colors, stating counts, make, quality and cost price. Lots down to 50 pounds will be considered.

Housewives are being urged to dry pears. The crop of this fruit is unusually heavy yet on account of the shortage of labor much of it cannot be cared for in the canneries, hence a special call has been issued by W. B. Ayer, federal food administrator, urging the women of the state to dry the pears, which can be had for a low price. Quar-tered and cored, with or without peeling, they make fine sauce for winter use. A limited number of government pamphlets on home drying processes are available at the food administration, 401 Northwestern Bank building.

Washington, Aug. 31.—(WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE JOURNAL)—Senators Chamberlain and McNary and Representative Sinnott Friday conferred with the capital issues committee on the proposed bond issue for the Warm Springs irrigation project. They were informed that a decision will be reached early next week. The situation is regarded as being favorable, although approval has not yet been assured.

Yakima Mill to Cut Timber for Aircraft

Yakima, Wash., Aug. 31.—The Cascade Lumber company of this city will begin at once on a contract of getting out spruce and pine timber for government aircraft construction. The announcement was made by Manager A. H. Huebner. Kenneth Ross, personal representative of John D. Ryan, and Lieutenant A. D. Christenson of the aircraft service, with other experts, have been here several days subjecting the specimens of local timber to the official tests. The Yakima mill will specialize on end beams, which are to be cut 24 feet long, instead of the customary 16 feet. These are particularly needed and the local timber seems particularly adapted to this purpose.

Bed Time Tales

Pinkum Is Naughty
THE well at the Jones Farm was not a deep well, but was one of those nice big springs, which never failed in dry weather. The water was always cold in the hottest summer days.

So Pinkum, when he found himself in the water at the bottom of the well, felt so much at home that he just climbed into the empty bucket, and he sat there quietly, saying to himself, "Well, I'm glad to say I'm home again. It is nice and cool, down here, and I'll just wait until kind Farmer Jones comes to draw me up!"

And little Pinkum was right, for Farmer Jones did come, very early that morning, to draw a bucket of water. And when Farmer Jones drew that oaken bucket to the top and saw that little runt of a Possum sitting quietly in the bottom, Farmer Jones was so surprised that you could have knocked him over with a piece of thistledown.

But Farmer Jones had a very kind heart, and he just laughed aloud when he saw that grinning scamp sitting up in his oaken bucket! And all the Jones family came out to the well, when they heard Farmer Jones laughing. And then everybody laughed and laughed at that comical sight. And Farmer Jones gave Pinkum to little William, saying, "William, you can keep little Pinkum now for your pet. Three times and out is the rule in playing ball. And this little runt Possum has made three home runs to our home; and we'll adopt him now as a member of the family."

Now, little Pinkum felt perfectly at home. So that afternoon he snuggled around the kitchen when no one was near. And he found the molasses jug, and he took out the cork and tried to get at the molasses. And he found that, by tipping the jug over on the floor, he could get at the sweet stuff better.

He took out the cork and tried to get at the molasses.

Pinkum knew he ought not to do it, but he did want that molasses so much! So he went right ahead, though he knew he was naughty.

And when he was chock full of sweetness, he decided to mop up the rest of the molasses with his fur coat, just as he had seen the Farmer's wife mop up the floor with a mop. Then Pinkum heard someone coming, and he ran up on the veranda of the house and climbed into the cradle with the farmer's little baby! And Pinkum snuggled down close to the baby and threw his fur coat over her to keep her warm.

And that was the sweetest little baby you ever saw, after Pinkum had hugged her up, warm and tight, with all his clothes dripping with the sticky molasses!
