Army of America Cause of Anxiety To German People

By Alfred G. Andersen (Copyright, 1918, by Star Company) During my visit to Berlin the rapidly growing American army cast a heavy shadow over the German people. The situation became so serious that Port development and humanity ap- the government institued widespread propaganda of falsehood to relieve the

"And," he asserted blandly, "they could not transport them to Europe. America lacked shirping facilities. She has been able to send only 200,000 poorly-equipped soldiers to France.

"The United States had about 6000 officers in the regular army. But the largest tactical unit was a battalio 23,678 of about 700 men. How in the world 20,782 could these oficers suddenly command a million, even after they had them?"

Here Dr. Bathelme paused and looked inquiringly at his audience. Nobody offered to suggest how the feat might be accomplished. Throughout the audience sat as mute as the Kamakura Daibute. If Barthelme's misrepresentations made any impression it was not apparent.

"Now then," he resumed, "why did 5,336 America enter the war? Let me tell you something." And this is what he told us:

"Fifty million Americans are at this moment pro-German. "Fifteen millions, including 13,000,000 negroes, are neutral. "Only 35,000,000 Americans are pro-

they would lose their billions. "Another factor was the fear of Ja pan. The American government seized upon the world conflict as an excuse for raising a large army to discourage any interference in its future policies by the Japanese."

These falsehoods were not new to Berliners. They had been repeated so 22,242 systematically in the German papers that every German accepted them as

England "Deliberately Favored" "But these motives could have been overcome if the president had not unconditionally favored England and deliberately created a situation in which congress was bound to follow him."

What the nature of this "situation" was Dr. Barthelme did not undertake to state. The details of Germany's announcement to Mr. Gerard of an arbitrary extension of the U-boat zone are no part of the German government's propaganda against America. Dr. Barthelme's amazing fiction about
