SERIOUS DAMAGES FOLLOWS WOUNDS FROM BIG SHELL

Portland Man Recovers From Flesh Wounds, but Trouble in Ear Causes Uneasiness.

HOPES FOR LASTING PEACE

Walter Sidebottom Satisfied for Sacrifices Made if Allies Exact Strenuous Terms.

"I saw a picture of my friend, George Cameron in The Journal, and he looks not a day older and just as I remember him," writes Walter Sidebottom, a former Portlander who has been wounded in service in France. "Thanks for The Journal, evidently the judge was too modest to forward it.

"I have quite recovered from my shell wounds but I regret to say an infinitely more serious damage has been discovered and I am now rather anxiously waiting the outcome. I have partially lost the hearing in the left ear and though there is a large perforation the trouble seems to be a mastoid which sooner or later will affect the brain.

"I had special leave and consulted a Harley street specialist who declared an operation inevitable. The specialist here declares the operation a very serious one and is trying to get me right without going to the extreme. I don't know what to do. Most of the similar cases have left the unfortunates with a crooked eye and twisted mouth so that I funk anyone but the best to try my case. This the army will not allow, we cannot pick our own doctor even though we are willing to pay for private operations. Doesn't it seem rough? The only thing I can do is to pray for a speedy peace and in the meantime endeavor by fortitude to avoid going stupid.

"At the earliest date I would then allow the best man in London to try his luck. The war news is splendid and if only President Wilson and the other allied advisors will stick to unconditional surrender we soldiers will be satisfied and think lightly of our misfortunes.

"Life in barracks is almost like heaven after France and I have a job in the squadron office pen pushing. I am already marked home employment, but with this nightmare over we shall possibly be discharged.

"My father is naturally quite upset and talks of a trip to France to find my brother's grave and then a journey to Buenos Aires to see my second brother and his family. Then I had hoped to travel to the coast after it's all over. Tell the judge I am not depressed though a trifle anxious. I have the consolation that if I am eventually incapable of doing much I shall at least not starve and they say that when one's brain grows weary one is easily pleased so I might spend my days watching the tide go out and come in."

HELL SEEMED NEAR TO YANK

Portland Man Enjoys Wild Life of War Game.

"It's all going to be over before you could get your spiral leggins and gas mask on," wrote James Hutchings, who was serving in France with Company F, Tenth engineers, October 9. "We aren't going to wait around over here and fool away our time. We're doing some business with Germany now.

"You notice, I say, we,—yep, I mean to include myself in that. I'm seeing the big show and seeing more of it than some folks, and every little while something happens that makes me think that hell isn't so far away. But I'm all in one piece so far, although I got one little bump once. But in aiming to pay someone for it several guys paid. I'm beginning to like to be wild and woolly, but this is a rough game. Some exciting, too, at times and in some ways it is all fun. Did you ever start out for a nice peaceful ride on a big truck with a stolen—or, rather, a borrowed machine gun on said truck and all at once find that somebody had dropped about 15 pounds of lively hell under the rear of said truck, which blew it all to pieces? Well, if that isn't excitement there is no such fish, and wouldn't it make you mad? I'm quite an old timer over here now. I have a whole sleeve full of service stripes and I'm going in for more. My little old blouse looks like a million dollars to me, and this suit of mine is filled with a real man, and I can think even with my gas mask and iron hat on."

Nathan N. Enkeles, with the motor supply train in France, wrote to Dan Kelleher of the police department and told of the interest around a wine making establishment in France. He says: "You know France is noted for its raising of grapes and making wine and you can be sure I drink my share of the wine. It's good, and say, if I thought Sherlock Holmes or Pat Maloney wouldn't arrest me, why I would send you some in a fountain pen.

"I haven't found a location here yet, because if I postpone it for a couple of months, why I'll pick out a place in Berlin. There will be plenty of unclaimed goods there."

TAGS ARE TO BE SOLD TO RAISE FUNDS FOR WAVERLEY BABY HOME

Many War Babies Sheltered and More Expected; Plans Are Made for Tag Sale.

"For the babies at home."

This is the slogan which has been adopted by the workers for the Waverly Baby Home tag day, the day before Thanksgiving. This tag day has a real patriotic appeal, as the home is sheltering many war babies and expects to be called upon to care for many more within the next few months. The tags will be 25 cents each, with dollar tags for motors and business houses.

Mrs. William MacMaster, chairman for the tag day, presided at a meeting of representatives of groups of women from all sections of the city Wednesday afternoon at the Hotel Portland, when Mrs. D. C. Burns, president of the Baby Home, told of the scope and need of the home. Henry E. Reed outlined the plan for districting the city into five divisions. The first contingent will be a small group of women who will do special soliciting; under the head of the city center 10 captains will be appointed for the down-town district; 25 selling stations will be established in the down-town district; the residence districts will be taken care of by the Parent-Teacher associations and the Eastern Star. The industrial plants will be canvassed by a special corps of workers.

Among the groups of women and their head workers who are pledged to work in the tag day are:

LADYBUGS ARE TO BE IMPORTED TO COMBAT DESTRUCTIVE APHIDES

Insects Abundant in Forests East of Cascades Are Collected to Help to Save Grain.

Ladybugs from the Wenatchee, the Rainier, the Crater and other national forests are soon to be gathered by the bureau of entomology to be used for combating the aphides next summer. Their haunts have been discovered by forest rangers, and the bugs are being gathered and placed in cold storage at the laboratory of the bureau of entomology at Forest Grove, until next summer when the aphides commence to devour the farmers' grain.

A. C. Burrill, in charge of the laboratory, visited the district forest office this morning and conferred with A. J. Jaenicke, insect specialist, regarding further cooperation between the bureau and the forest service. Mr. Burrill has just returned from an agricultural survey of Western Washington. In one district alone he found the damage to $1,000,000.

Few ladybugs are found west of the Cascades, and it will be necessary to transport them across the mountains to the infested areas. Dr. Trevor Kincaid, head of the department of zoology of the University of Washington, has noted only a few locations in the Olympia peninsula where the ladybug grows.

Most of the ladybug catches have been located east of the Cascades mountains. From Canada to California they thrive in abundance. In the Wenatchee national forest the largest stores have been found, although the largest single catches were located on the east side of Mount Rainier, where from 30 to 100 quarts were found. The bugs do not thrive west of the Cascades because of the dampness, which causes a fungus to grow upon their backs which kills them, according to scientists.

Collecting of the beetles will be accompilshed for the most part, this fall. In distributing the insects next summer, first consideration will be given the immediate region where the bugs were located, according to Mr. Burrill, and no bugs will be transported out of a region where found, unless an abundant supply remains.

Molalla to Limit Speed of Autos on Streets of the City

Molalla, Nov. 21.—School opened again Monday after having been closed three weeks ago on account of the influenza ban. Churches and lodges have all resumed their regular meetings. Although there were several cases of influenza, up to the present time there have been no deaths.

The city council at its last regular meeting considered the matter of several new ordinances. Among the most important of these was one regulating the speed of automobiles in different sections of the city. This ordinance will be posted for two weeks and come up for final passage at the next regular meeting.

Molalla Rebekahs Elect Officers

Molalla, Nov. 21.—Oak Rebekah lodge No. 159 of Molalla, at its last regular meeting, elected the following officers for the ensuing term: Noble grand, Mrs. Grace Park; vice grand, Mrs. Gertrude Everhart; recording secretary, Mrs. Ethel Blatchford; financial secretary, Miss Gladys Mason; treasurer, Mrs. Clara Robbins.

War-time Service in a Stylish Street Shoe

WOMEN, even more than men, reflect the spirit of the times in what they use and wear.

There is a demand throughout America for a woman's shoe of service, of comfort, of economy. A shoe that looks smart on the foot and yet meets or anticipates the Government's desire to eliminate needless extravagance of wasteful frivolity in dress.

Our way of meeting this demand is another triumph for Regal shoemaking. It shows the value of the Regal policy of concentration. Our whole organization is engaged in producing a few styles that most people want, rather than a lot of styles that few people want.

This literally means quantity production of a few highly specialized types—and America is fast learning the value of that in every commodity from shoes to ships.

This Wellesley boot (illustrated) is an example of the advantages of this Regal concentration policy. It is made of Cordo Russia selected side leather, with top eight inches high and a one-and-a-half-inch Cuban heel. It is one of the smartest street shoes of the season—a day-by-day shoe; the mainstay of a woman's shoe equipment. The price is $7.00

It is easy to pay too little as well as pay too much for shoes. Regal Shoes provide a safe middle course—good shoes at a price you are justified in paying.
