END OF WAR IS SEEN FROM HIGH CHURCH STEEPLE

Major F. W. Rase Sees Hun-Climb Out of Trenches When the Armistice is Signed.

FIGHT HARD TO THE LAST

Oregon Man With 91st Division Sees Tough Fighting at St.
Mihiel, Argonne, in Belgium.

Writing from Ghent, Belgium, Major F. W. Rase, who has been in France with the 36th Infantry of the 91st Wild West division, writes an account of the last moment of the war before the armistice took effect. Major Rase was formerly with the forestry department in Portland.

"Our division, the Wild West, has been in Belgium since October 18, having come in from the famous city of Ypres where we were just long enough to see for ourselves what is probably the most horrible battle ground the world has ever known—even more terrible than Verdun, which I also had a chance to look over. We were in the St. Mihiel battle; in fact, it was our first. Later we got into the Meuse-Argonne, where we had our toughest fighting. Nine days at a stretch there, and busy ones, too.

"It is over now and the world is happy. It ended pretty much as I expected it would, with the enemy holding on and fighting hard to the very last, and then crumpling up before the onrushing allies and our gallant troops.
My battalion had the honor of being on the firing line on the day before and day of the suspension of hostilities. You no doubt have read a number of accounts of those dramatic hours. We could see the enemy on the morning of the 11th, not more than 800 yards from us. They were waiting anxiously for word that the armistice had been signed.
We really thought that that night we had orders to renew our attack at 10 that morning. At 9:40 the word reached me that hostilities all along the line would cease. My headquarters was in the kitchen of a little house, as the enemy doesn't easily spot the little ones, in the town of Hicourt, St. Cornille, Belgium. I passed the word along to my battalion and went up in the steeple of the church for a good view. I will never forget that night that met me in the air. As far as I could see were columns of Germans on their way back home.
Those directly on our front were yelling, singing and dancing and throwing hats in the air. Two hours later, when I sent patrols out four kilometers from our line, they came back with the report that the enemy had gone."
"We are still in Belgium, but on our way back to France. Did not parade in Brussels, as we would have had to were 10 miles from there when the excitement stopped."

Jessie Ray Nottingham, formerly with the public welfare bureau in Portland, and now serving with the American Red Cross in Paris, tells of work among the French refugees in a letter to her former co-workers.

"I am assistant delegate for the department of Veneto," says Miss Nottingham. "My particular work is the relief for the refugees here in La Tocche-sur-Yon. We supply medical aid, clothing and some food. Although our last instructions state that we now give food only upon the request of the physician. We sell furniture, sheets and blankets to the refugees at half the cost, to be paid for on the installment plan, if they are able to pay, but most of it is given."

"We have been doing salvage work for the United States army, and in October our refugees washed and mended 194,529 garments. Now they are making 'Dorothy' hats and other things for soldiers to convalesce in."
"I have seen all the excitement and shirting to town and back to wait for more food. In spite of this delay, we made out 5000 bags in November. When you consider that over half of them are made by hand it is really amazing."

"Madame C. is a refugee from Lille.
She is 73 years old and never asks for anything. She needed a wrap and the Red Cross delegate gave her a black cape. She was so delighted that she kissed the entire office staff."
"The day the armistice was signed we three from the local office met her in the street after the celebration.
She was on her way to the postoffice and had a bunch of letters in her hand.
She waved them to us and cried, 'Lille, Lille. I shall go back to Lille.' She was so happy she kissed each of us on both cheeks French fashion. Today she came with a postcard begging for Mr. Sparks and a beautiful branch of mistletoe for me. She had probably gone without food to be able to buy them for us. She explained to me that I was to hang the mistletoe in my room until the second of February, when I must burn it and save the ashes. This will bring happiness."

"Thanksgiving evening there was a special church service in honor of our American holiday. In this town of 15, 000 people there are only three Americans, and we two Red Cross people were the only Americans at the service. We were seated in the section reserved for the militia and in spite of the fact that I was in uniform with 'U. S.' and a red cross on each shoulder, I was exceedingly conscious of the fact that I was the only woman seated with about a hundred French army officers and one Red Cross lieutenant.
The bishop of Lucon made a splendid address upon America's part in the war. The service began and closed with 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

Confusion Results From Too Many 'Flu' Rules in the State

Spanish influenza regulations are causing a considerable number of mix-ups over the state, from the number of inquiries and complaints reaching Health Officer A. C. Seely.

Regulations were issued from the state board of health, according to Dr. Seely, but in some instances they were not deemed sufficient by local authorities, who added more regulations. As a result, none of the regulations are being enforced.

New influenza cases over the state, as in the city, are on the increase at the present time, probably because of holiday gatherings. Dr. Seely resumed his work this morning upon his return from Roseburg, where he was called several days ago by the death of his mother.
