

OBTAINED GREAT ADVERTISING FOR PEACE CONGRESS

A. P. Ames, Editor of League Paper, Was Quiet but Efficient Member of Party.

VALUED AT $1,000,000 DAILY

Publicity Director Praises Work of The Journal in Behalf of Late Peace Congress.

One of the members of the League of Nations party, headed by ex-President Taft, in Portland Sunday and Monday, was a man who made no speeches and who met few besides the newspaper men.

Mr. Ames has the job of spreading through all mediums of publicity the propaganda of the League of Nations, and he is getting it done in the measure of thousands of columns, which Edward A. Filene, the Boston merchant, who was a member of the Taft party, estimates would cost $1,000,000 a day if paid for at the regular advertising rates.

Mr. Ames praised the arrangements for the Northwestern congress for a League of Nations and the newspapers that first announced it to the public of Washington, Oregon and Northern Idaho and then covered its proceedings with unusual fullness.

"It is the best job of publicity we have had," said Ames. "The cooperation from the newspapers and periodicals of the Northwest was splendid. I would like particularly to speak of what the Journal has done." He continued, "From the beginning the Journal has been most influential in the Northwest in giving to the people the ideals of world peace, the objectives of democracy and the purposes of a League of Nations. Its editorials have been conspicuously able and have been frequently quoted in the League Bulletin."

"As for Portland, it is the first city I have visited east of New York in which I felt I would like to make my home and to which I would like to bring my family."

Before taking up his work with the League to Enforce Peace, Mr. Ames was with the Associated Press and was later the Chicago manager of the United Press. He left for San Francisco Monday evening at 8 o'clock and will attend the League of Nations congress in that city, Salt Lake City, St. Louis and Atlanta. He has already attended the congresses arranged for by ex-President Taft as president of the League to Enforce Peace at New York, Boston, Chicago and Minneapolis.

Man Fined $500 For Driving His Car While Intoxicated

From a strictly pecuniary standpoint, whiskey proved to be a very expensive luxury to two Portlanders who appeared before Municipal Judge Rossman Tuesday, on charges involving the sale of liquor. Charles Schade, proprietor of a small machine shop, was given a $500 fine, the heaviest ever imposed by Judge Rossman, when convicted of driving an automobile while intoxicated, and Edward J. Bray, proprietor of the Idle Hour poolroom at 146 Third street, was fined $350 when convicted of violating the prohibition law.

Schade had been arrested by Patrolman Stuart, at Twenty-third and Washington streets, January 31, on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated. Because of the fact that his imprisonment would throw four other mechanics out of employment, the jail sentence, which has usually been imposed by Judge Rossman on persons convicted of driving cars while drunk, was omitted and the heavy fine substituted.

Bray had been arrested January 19, and his case had been hanging fire ever since. Officer Abbott of the war emergency squad, who arrested Bray, testified that he secured only a small glass of whiskey as Bray, seeing the officers enter, poured the rest of his stock into the sink.

Remillard Homer, also accused of violating the prohibition law, was turned over to the United States authorities. Homer was arrested Sunday by Officer Phillips, while leaving a California train with a suitcase filled with whiskey.

Police Are Seeking Two Missing Men

The assistance of the Portland police in locating two missing men was requested by relatives of the missing persons Tuesday. Charles Roobe, a German, 42 years old, disappeared from his home in Malwale about two weeks ago and his wife fears he is dead or has met with foul play. Roobe is described as being 5 feet 5 inches in height, weighing 140 pounds, with dark eyes and dark hair.
