DRESS by Anne Reiffenhouse

NEW YORK.—A few of the new French gowns are fashioned in such a manner that one would think only the front was intended to be shown; that the women who wore them must stand with their backs to the wall. This is a curious new trick in costume. Those who are interested in the whims and caprices of fashion should pay attention to it.

It is not often in the whirligig of fashion that one can say the backs of some of the best new gowns have no trimming whatever, and that there is no adornment from shoulder to hem. The front of these new frocks is full of ornamentation of flounces of embroidery, lace, and a waistcoat. But all this manipulation of drapery stops abruptly at the sides of the figure, for the gown presents two entirely different aspects. When one views it from the front it looks entirely normal; when viewed from the back it looks abnormal.

Whether or not the American woman will be able to look her best in such clothes, the spring will determine. We may wear them, and again we may not. That is the question for the future. The present interesting fact is that these gowns are entirely new, and that the thing that has appeared in the realm of apparel. It is quite probable that the French designer intended this type of frock to be the sensation which they intended was to appear over the horizon as soon as the new peace clothes were exhibited.

There is no doubt about its being a sensation. It will create talk, gossip and protest. One French designer has sent such a gown to this country by an American importer, which shows a tunic which stops at the sides of the gown and makes no pretense of going across the back. So much for one startling feature.

The two materials that are used are Georgette and silk jersey, and right there is an oddity in fabric combination. Both are tame colored, and the effect is good. So the foundation of the gown does not appear freakish.

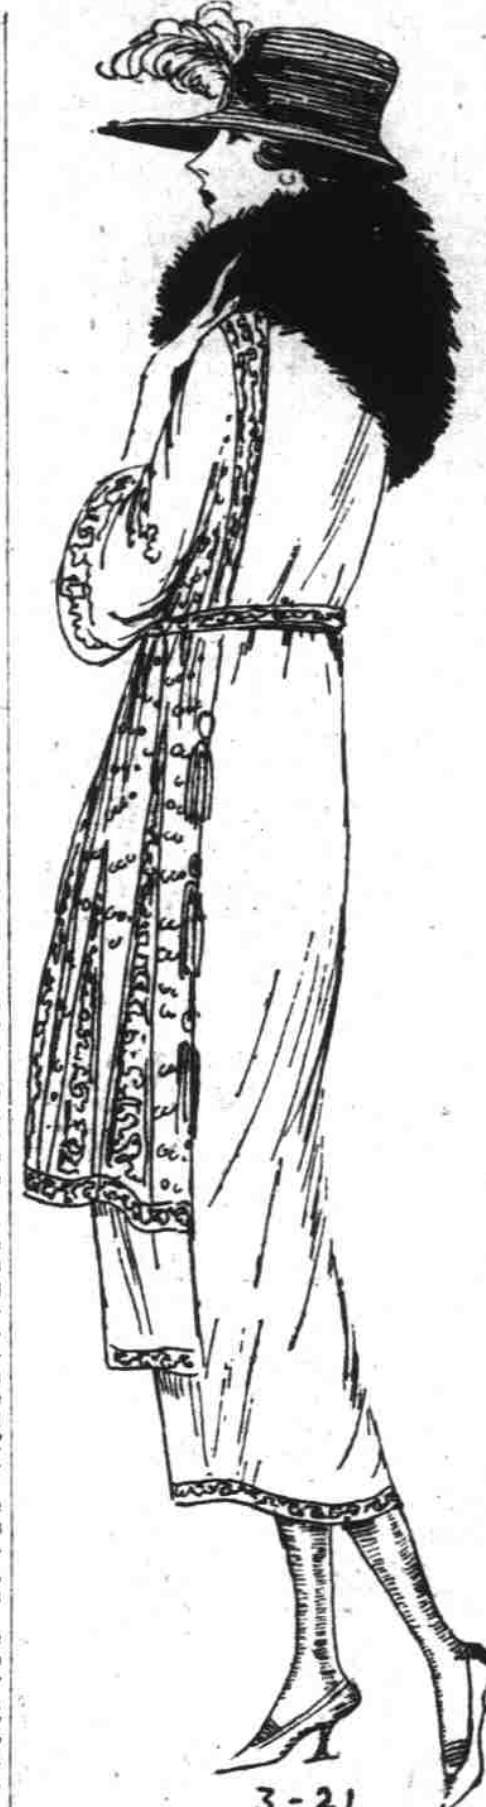

French designers are also putting together homespun and satin, and so we may expect a wide range of curious combinations which may be offered as novelties in addition to other surprising features. The French have promised to do something out of the commonplace in their spring clothes, you know, which are the first they have made since the armistice, and it is well to keep our eyes open for all sorts of capriciousness that may appear in fabrics as in cut and drapery.

There is such a strong desire to use Georgette on the part of all dressmakers that no one expects its reappearance in so many of the spring gowns, but one did expect it to appear as an adjunct to silk jersey.

In truth, the public was not quite sure whether this weave of jersey would come back into fashion. It was exploited over this continent last autumn, and then withdrawn for a fact which is true of America, but not of France, for they wore silk jersey throughout the winter over their under heavy coats.

In this imported frock of jersey and Georgette, which is sketched today, one can see quite a number of the eccentric fashions of the hour, and regard them as foretellers of what is to come. There is the extraordinary back, with its severity from tunic to hem and its close-fitting snugness, in direct contrast to the loose, flowing tunic which falls from neck to knees in front.

In order to give a bit more trimming to the front of the skirt the designer has added a flounce beneath the tunic, and the embroidery, which is plentiful, is done in pink and silver beads. The idea of putting primitive designs in

Red Cross Shop Out With Plea

Salvage Bureau Wants to "Stock Up" Before Big Clothing Drive Begins.

PLEASE stock up the Red Cross shop with used clothing, shoes and non-wanted books before the big old clothing drive begins in Portland.

This was the urgent plea this morning of Mrs. G. T. Trommald, director of the American Red Cross shop and salvage bureau, 79-72 Third street.

"After the Rotary club conducts its drive for the American Red Cross for 100 tons of clothing for devastated Europe and the Near East, 'pickins' will be mighty slim for the Red Cross shop," said Mrs. Trommald.

"I do hope that Portland people will remember now that we can sell all the clothing, whether for men, women or children, sent to us. Also, that we can do something to the Red Cross shop is just like making the Red Cross a gift of cash, for there are virtually no expenses in the running of the shop, all our assistance being donated by patriotic Portland women.

"We shall be glad to send the Red Cross truck for any bundles of goods on call to the American Red Cross shop. The Red Cross must have funds to continue its ever-growing home service work and its care of discharged soldiers. And this need for funds will last until the last soldier is discharged and a job secured for him.

"What do we want? Why, anything to which a sale tag can be attached. Clothing, shoes, books, toys, bric-a-brac, furniture, used and broken jewelry—and, oh, just anything.

"So please, Portland people, stock up before this great drive begins April 7. For I know that after you have given all your clothes to the Rotary club members it will be a long time before you have anything for the Red Cross shop."

Modern poets, both British and American, were discussed at the meeting of the current literature department of the Portland Women's club held Thursday at the home of Mrs. D. M. Watson on Willamette Heights. Mrs. Helen Miller Senn gave a comparative study between the work of Walt Whitman and Edgar Allan Poe. She also read from Max Eastman, the socialist, giving some of his poems and one of his essays. Charming bits of poetry from the pen of a Portland girl were also given, although the identity of the author was not disclosed. The value of the psychological tests which constituted a part of the examinations for admission and proper

Date for String Quartet Is Advanced

Mozart Quintet, With Solo for Clarinet, to Be Made Special Feature.

THE date of the second of the chamber music concerts of the Christensen String quartet has been advanced to Sunday afternoon, March 30, instead of being given in April, as was first intended, owing to the fact that Victor Christensen, first violin of the organization, will play for 10 weeks with the Seattle Symphony orchestra, and must leave early in April to fulfil his engagement.

A special attraction of the second concert will be the famous Mozart Quintet for strings and clarinet, the red instrument to be played by C. Owen Sanders, first clarinet of the Portland Symphony orchestra. The quartet of strings will be the same as at the first concert, which will be given, as before, at Christensen's hall.

Garden Hints

BY SHEBA CHILDS HARGREAVES (OF PORTLAND)

The "silver thaw" does not occur every year in Portland by a long margin, but when it does it leaves a trail of destruction in its wake. In the Hood River valley the orchardists sometimes braid two plant shoots from opposite limbs together, in a few years a natural brace is formed which prevents the splitting of the trunk under the load of weight; this also strengthens old trees which the crotch is weakened. Another good method of tree bracing is to fasten strong galvanized wire from limb to limb, fastening the wire to the tree by means of screws with eyes in them. The eyes are soon completely bedded in the wood, and thus make the brace absolutely secure. The time to prevent tree accidents is long before they happen and this is done by intelligent pruning and bracing.

"Pride of Portland" is a beautiful petunia for bedding for the window boxes. They originated with a local nursery. Every garden will be more beautiful if a few are grown.

Time to spray: the buds are swelling rapidly. It will soon be too late to do much good.
