

LATE ARCHDUKE HOLDS SCORN FOR COMMON PEOPLE

One Time Heir to Throne of Austria-Hungary Allies Himself With Czernin Plot.

TO STRENGTHEN MONARCHY

Popular Will as Expressed in Desire for Suffrage Ignored, as Memorandum Shows.

could not do anything. Other men were just as surprised as I, but it is nevertheless true. [In the next paragraph Count Czernin sketches his conversation with the archduke, employing the terms "I" and "he," but the names are substituted to make the matter more clear. The conversation is put partly in the first and partly in the third person.]

Wanted to "Shoot and Crush"
Czernin—I said I would have to believe this if he said so. But the whole world declared that Chlopy (a certain newspaper article) was inspired by him. All Austrians were pleased at its energetic tone.

Archduke—Yes, that is true, but within a few weeks it was retracted and the whole matter was so much the worse. He can do nothing but wait. He hopes that the moment will not come for a very long time, but when it does then he will make order (shoot, crush, etc., etc.).

Czernin—Your imperial highness, I am entirely of the opinion that shooting is one of the most convincing arguments of a monarch, but to shoot, one needs an army and that army you will not have any more.

Archduke—Trust to God. Austria went through worse times and always survived. (At my silence.) Well, are you without hope?

Czernin—If he does not do something now he will regret it all his life. He admits that the whole chain of terrors from 1867 could be made null and void. He further admits that the universal suffrage measure will have a weakening effect on the army and that the Magyars are tough and determined. We have to admit that. For the Lord's sake with what can we break and smash anything?

Archduke—There are thousands of ways. First, we would set all the nations upon them. He has a secret plan, but he cannot tell me. [The archduke probably means to fight the Magyars with other nationalities in Hungary—a favorite Hapsburg pastime.]

Czernin—I replied that foreign nations are easily called, but with difficulty sent away. One's own powers is the only thing upon which one can really depend.

Eitel Fritz Studies Magyar
Archduke—He asked as if he did not mean this and began to swear against Italy and Germany. With Italy the danger of war is great, anyway. Then there is Eitel Fritz with his Magyar studies. Finally he asked me if I wanted him to go to the emperor [to Francis Joseph].

Czernin—Yes, certainly.

Archduke—No, that he would not do. He would not let himself be kicked out. There are two kinds of heels, those who are inactive through lack of power and those who revolt. He belongs to the first class and I expect him to be of the latter.

Czernin—No, that I do not ask, but I believe the army to be the adored child of his majesty. Further, I believe that no one has yet called attention to the effect of suffrage reform on the army. His majesty is 76 years old. He had no longer any power of resistance. He would like to have the whole matter finished and, therefore, it should be easy to call his attention to these dangerous points. Then it could be possible that if his attention were called to it he would delay it. This, in my opinion, is not a revolt, but performing a duty ordered by our Lord.

Archduke—That is wrong. His majesty is not resistless, but— (I have given the archduke my word never to speak about this to any one and so I will not write it down. Then he again swore against the camarilla, Golochowski, Hungary, etc. Great landlords should be massed under a state preserving flag against the social democratic onslaught. Again citations from my pamphlet. "Bohemia is a li-

COL. ROOSEVELT AND FAMILY

Lieutenant Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and his family made at the Roosevelt home in New York on Lieutenant Colonel Roosevelt's return from France, where he commanded the 26th U. S. Infantry. Mrs. Roosevelt returned but a short time ago. She was the first Y. M. C. A. canteen worker sent to France. The children are, from left to right, Grace, Cornelius and Theodore Jr.

de Hungary." He always said so. I said it in my third chapter. All men around his majesty are canaille.

Counting Up the Support
Czernin—We have to differentiate between the conservative great landholders. Some belong to the "qualite negligible" just as the majority of the others. Clam is a very dependable, smart and sober thinking man, who is inclined to cooperation. He would be one of the props for the absolutely necessary fusion. Franz Thun is also very important. He—the archduke—should tell Thun that he desires rapprochement. Franz Thun is not a nationalist, but from top to bottom is painted black and yellow [the Austrian colors].

Archduke—Clam is one of his best friends. I should greet him very cordially, but before he wasn't so moderate. He will speak with Thun. [Clam Martinez was brother-in-law of Archduke Francis].

Czernin—The times are changing and the programs with them. Clam is saturated with the idea of defense. My plan is as follows: The archduke should give us a little air by delaying the whole matter and then defense is our affair. Taroucca must act openly and work for fusion in order to give backbone to the parliament and cabinet, neither of which wishes election reform. Taroucca has great influence as the leader of a great party (in Prague) also. He is through and through convinced of the danger which confronts the state. We have to count with him for fusion.

Archduke—I should tell Taroucca that he is absolutely of the same opinion. Taroucca must keep this in strict secrecy, but should work for it with all his might. (I imagine he will speak with him about it in Bruhonnitz).

"Graves of Cabinets in Bohemia"
Czernin—If he should succeed in delaying the matter, then it is half won. In the meantime a counter coalition would have to be effected. The main difference lies in Prague. In winter this year fusion must be made.

Archduke—The graves of all the cabinets lie in Bohemia (cites from brochure).

Czernin—The start is already made (the combined committee).

Archduke—He has read it with great joy. In my brochure the wish in the paper is the fact.

Archduke—The fusion must be effected. A fusion adheres—until further. Then the house of lords. There are among them men of strong character—F. Thun, Louis Schonburg, Carl Auerperg. But if the emperor or archduke should wish it they would give in. They call it loyalty if he would speak with them. Archduke—Yes, with Thun and Schonburg. Auerperg is too stubborn. Nevertheless, he will write tomorrow to his majesty in the spirit of my request

DR. B. E. WRIGHT

In some things we are all more or less negligent or careless.

You may be very alert along certain lines and almost indifferent about other lines that are of equal or even greater importance.

Every day men and women come to this office with their teeth in a condition that denotes sad neglect. A few previous visits to a dentist would have saved the teeth and preserved the health.

The usual excuses are fear of pain; did not realize that teeth were in such bad condition; did not want to spend the necessary money, and so forth.

It is well for such people that dental science has progressed to such an extent that I can take what looks like a useless tooth or teeth and rebuild and make them strong and presentable once more.

Sometimes the teeth are so badly decayed that the stumps must be removed and artificial teeth substituted.

In such cases a plate is necessary. Now, don't say that you wouldn't wear a plate. A plate made with absolute precision and fitting perfectly is a comfort and a pleasure.

Hundreds of my patrons are wearing plates that you can't distinguish from natural teeth and are a revelation to people who have worn or seen the loose, humiliating plates made by bungling, careless dentists.

Possibly you may be able to secure as good work, but you can't get better than I give every day in the week, so why take chances when the very best awaits you here.

No students. All registered graduate dentists in my employ.

The evening congregational singing will be under the direction of Harold Hurbit. The Temple quartet will render choice selections at both services.

ESPIONAGE CHARGE AGAINST PHYSICIAN DISMISSED BY COURT

Klamath Falls Man Also Freed From Charge; Action on Atty. General's Recommendation.

Indictments against Dr. Nels J. Lund, house physician of St. Vincent's hospital, and Daniel Sullivan of Klamath Falls, charged with espionage, were dismissed Saturday by United States District Judge Bean.

This action was the result of recommendations by Attorney General Palmer who, after reading detailed history of the cases, submitted to him at his request by United States Attorney Haney, declared there to be lack of evidence for prosecution at this time.

The motion for dismissal was made in court by Assistant United States Attorney Goldstein. The Lund and Sullivan cases were among those submitted to the attorney general by Mr. Haney on orders of the attorney general after the signing of the armistice. A summary of each pending case was asked for. It is understood that other Oregon cases in which espionage is charged are being considered by the attorney general for possible dismissal for lack of evidence. The indictment against Dr. Lund accused him of writing letters to a friend in China stating that crooks and grafters held sway in certain parts of the American war machine. Sullivan was charged with attacking the Red Cross and the Liberty loan.

Second Address Set for Tonight

Ben Scovell Talks On Sunday Night

This evening the well known Ben Scovell, who did such noted work as an entertainer for the soldiers in Belgium and France, is to be at the Highland Congregational church and speak at 8 o'clock. "Christ in the Trenches" will be his theme, and the story which he has to tell is one which is both pathetic and thrilling and contains a splendid tribute to the men who went overseas for service. All press and other notices speak in the highest terms of his oratory and dramatic power. He possesses no little of the great ability of his famous uncle, Sir Henry Irving.

Davidson, and a gospel hymn by the quartet.
